LIVING WITH AUTISM

SMALL AWAKENINGS FOR ROBERT

By Pat Marcantonio
Times-News writer

BOISE – Robert Casteel stares at the camera with wide, electric-blue eyes and shiny smile.

The 3-year-old bounces on the sofa, then stops as if posing for a national magazine layout. Responding to the flashes and clicks, he's like any kid hamming it up for pictures.

But Robert isn't any kid. He has autism. A year ago, he was oblivious to cameras and people – even to his family. He seemed to travel to a silent world only he could find.

But after months of intense instruction, it's as if Robert has awakened.

About these stories

This first installment is a yearlong Times-News series about autism looks at how parents seek help for autistic children.

Today's installment focuses on Robert Casteel, 3, of Twin Falls, his family moved to Boise to get Robert intensive treatment through a private program.

Sunday's installment focuses on Andrew Cummings, 13, of Burley. Since March, Andrew's family has been working with an Idaho company offering one-on-one therapy.

Move to Boise

It's noon and Sandy Seidl waits for her brother.

In March, she and Robert moved to Boise where he goes to a public preschool and in the afternoon receives three to five hours of one-to-one instruction from Seidl. That's until he's off the waiting list for a private Boise program specializing in autism.

It will be an intensive type of treatment; Robert will attend the program for at least 30 hours a week.

Seidl, 17, was trained and is supervised by the program to work with Robert at home.

At last, a school bus rumbles to a stop and Robert is brought to the door. He takes her hand back to their apartment. Later in his room, Seidl sits across from him.

"Get ready, Robert," she says, giving him the signal to start each lesson. "Stand up."

He does after a few tries.

"Good job," she says. Robert gets candy.

She asks him to touch a spoon on a table and he does so. They repeat this again and again. Experts says the activity prepares Robert to learn other skills.

Please see AUTISM, Page A4

After nearly a year of effort by his family, Robert Casteel, above, makes eye contact and interacts with family members. That's a huge improvement from a few months ago, top, when he would spend hours staring off into space.

Research may provide help for autistic children

By Pat Marcantonio
Times-News writer

SALT LAKE CITY – There is no cure for autism. It's uncertain what causes it.

But a team at the University of Utah found that treating epilepsy in some autistic children may provide new hope they will become more independent in later life.

The team is at the Center for Advanced Medical Technologies, a collaboration of the university's Department of Radiology and corporations. Medical Director Dr. Brian Chong emphasizes the findings don't constitute a treatment, but he is excited about the possibilities.

"What we are saying with a number of autistic children, if you diagnose epilepsy and you treat the epilepsy, that their symptoms improve, particularly their language," he said.

Braid starts with a marriage of existing technologies that take advantage of the brain's magnetic properties. Magnetic resonance imaging creates a detailed, three-dimensional image. Magnetoencephalography measures electrical currents of brain cells. The signals may be more than 1 million times smaller than the magnetic field generated by a light bulb, Chong said.

Take data from both along with mathematical calculations. The result is a magnetic-source imaging examination, or MSI, which allows an even more accurate mapping of the sources of abnormal brain activity such as epilepsy.

City storm drain may be contributor to high fecal levels in Rock Creek

By Pat Marcantonio
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – New tests show a city storm drain may be one source of fecal contamination in Rock Creek.

Meanwhile, signs warning people to stay out of the water will remain up this week.

Test results received Friday showed fecal coliform at 5,800 parts per 100 milliliters in water coming from Orchalara Tunnel, which flows into the creek about 300 yards upstream of Rock Creek Park, said Mike McMasters with the Idaho Division of Environmental Quality in Twin Falls.

"It's a contributor, no doubt about it," he said.

State and city specialists suspect septic systems draining illegally into the tunnel may be to blame.

"I knew there was some fecal coliform in there, so I'm not surprised," said Brad Gilmore, the city's environmental coordinator.

Next week, he'll enter the two-mile tunnel, which is large enough to stand in, to try to track a source.

But testing also showed elevated fecal contamination – linked to the waste of warm-blooded animals – from 3400 East all the way through the park, McMasters said.

Since late July, signs have warned people that the contamination exceeds the state standard for water activities, 500 parts per 100 milliliters. At one point, the levels hit 6,000 parts per 100 milliliters.

Through weeks of testing, this was the first time the division checked the city drain, McMasters said.

Early in the city's history, the tunnel was the city's accepted sewage system, Gilmore said. So he would not be surprised if a couple of systems drain directly, but illegally, into the tunnel.

"I have seen toilet paper in the underbrush," he said.

The purpose of the tunnel is to remove standing water after storms, but there also is a continuous groundwater flow of 2 to 3 cubic feet per second, Gilmore said.

The city doesn't regularly take water samples at the storm drain, but the city already plans work there as part of a federal mandate to improve Snake River water

A $3, phony bill: AT&T plans a minimum monthly usage rate

Combined wire reports

Starting Saturday, AT&T Corp.'s new residential long-distance customers must pay at least a $3 "minimum usage" fee every month for their service.

The service fee, announced Friday, is aimed at recovering at least $300 million a year in expenses the company says it incurs to provide long-distance service to customers who don't run up more than $3 a month in charges. The company estimates that group includes up about 15 percent of its customer base.

The long-distance giant said it won't impose the charge on low-income customers enrolled in state telephone pay-assistance programs.

George Bennett, AT&T vice president of the consumer markets division, said, "We believe today's action, which has customers pay their share of costs, is the right approach for AT&T's consumer business and the company as a whole."

Under AT&T's new policy, for example, a customer who made no long-distance calls during the month would pay the full $3 service fee; someone who made $2.50 worth of long-distance calls would be billed a usage fee of 50 cents to reach the $3 monthly minimum, and customers who make more than $3 in long-distance calls would not see any minimum usage fee on their monthly bills.

Existing AT&T customers won't be subject to the new policy, even if they change addresses, the company said. But anyone who changes long-distance companies and then comes back to AT&T would be subject to the $3 monthly minimum.

And after Jan. 1, if an existing customer changes AT&T calling plans, the $3 minimum will kick in if the plan doesn't already charge a monthly fee. AT&T offers a variety of plans, ranging from a flat rate per minute for all calls to rates that go up and down depending on the time of day a call is made and its distance.

Consumer advocates Friday called AT&T's minimum fee unfair. Gene Kimmelman, co-director of Consumer Union's Washington office, said AT&T "is

Does a lie always equal perjury?

Knight Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — On the face of it, it seems that surely either Bill Clinton or Monica Lewinsky has committed perjury, for they have testified under oath to contradictory versions of their relationship.

But Lewinsky has broad legal protection against perjury charges under an immunity agreement she reached for her grand jury testimony.

And the legal ambiguities of the case could mean that Clinton, the self-described "comeback kid," escapes any perjury trap when he testifies Monday before Independent counsel Kenneth Starr's grand jury.

Clinton has said he will answer questions before the jury "completely and truthfully." This weekend he is spending time with his lawyers and his wife, Hillary, preparing for his testimony.

In a deposition in the Paula Jones civil suit in January, Clinton denied a sexual relationship with Lewinsky, a former White House intern. Now Lewinsky has told the grand jury she and Clinton had a sexual affair and discussed ways to conceal it. But she also said the president never directly suggested she lie under oath, according to a lawyer familiar with the case.

A transcript of Clinton's deposition in January shows he furnished many answers that were too vague to be subjects of perjury. He said, for example, it was "possible" he and Lewinsky were alone in the White House at times but left the impression they met on official business only.

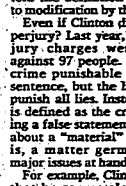

He said he could not remember giving any gifts to Lewinsky but "I could have." He said he could have given Lewinsky an item purchased from The Black Dog store in Martha's Vineyard and "could have" given her a book about Walt Whitman. But he didn't remember giving her a gold brooch or a hatpin. "I give people a lot of gifts," he said.

But on the central question of sexual relations, he made an unqualified denial.

"I have never had sexual relations with Monica Lewinsky," Clinton said. "I've never had an affair with her."

Clinton could claim he was confused about the meaning of "sexual relations."

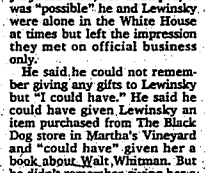

When he was asked the question at the Jones deposition, Jones' lawyers presented a definition of sexual relations that included a broad range of intimate touching "with an intent to arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person." But Clinton also was told the definition was subject to modification by the judge.

Bill Clinton

Even if Clinton did lie, was it perjury? Last year, federal perjury charges were brought against 97 people. Perjury is a crime punishable by a prison sentence, but the law does not punish all lies. Instead, perjury is defined as the crime of making a false statement under oath about a "material" matter, that is, a matter germane to the major issues at hand.

For example, Clinton testified that he serves alcohol in the Oval Office of the White House. If that is untrue, he would be guilty of lying but not of perjury, because alcohol was not material to the Jones case, which grew out of her claims Clinton had sexually propositioned her while he was governor of Arkansas.

Legal experts concede a sound argument can be made Clinton's denial of sexual relations with Lewinsky was not material to the case and therefore cannot be the subject of a perjury charge.

Myanmar releases 18 foreign activists

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Eighteen foreign activists jailed by the military junta in Myanmar for distributing anti-government leaflets were expelled from that country today and arrived in Bangkok to weeping relatives.

"Of course, I'm very happy," screamed Eliese Sana, 36, of the Philippines. "I didn't want to stay there any longer."

The activists, including six Americans, were convicted in a one-day trial in Myanmar on Friday of violating the Emergency Provisions Act and sentenced to five years' hard labor. The catch-all law has been used to sentence hundreds of political prisoners to terms as long as 20 years.

Almost immediately, though, government officials announced that the sentences were reduced, and the activists would be deported Saturday. They spent their last night in Myanmar in a police guesthouse.

East African tourism suffers fallout from blast

Los Angeles Times

NAIROBI, Kenya — Snow-capped Mount Kilimanjaro stands sentinel over the vast plains of the Serengeti and the Masai Mara, where lions roar, elephants thunder and buffalo slip sloppily and gratefully into water holes. For tourists and adventurers, there's no place like it.

But in the wake of the Aug. 7 bombings of U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, safari operators have been inundated with a wave of what one called "panic cancellations," almost all of them from Americans.

The lost business is one ripple effect of the bombs that exploded almost simultaneously in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania. The blasts promise now to unleash a powerful, lingering financial woe on two East African nations that can ill afford it.

Kenya's ailing economy, for instance, depends significantly on the lucrative tourism trade.

Noting the wave of safari cancellations, Nripjit Bahlla, who is the mayor of Mombasa, Kenya's second-largest city, asked Friday: "Why should Kenya be punished for something we had nothing to do with?"

Study shows antiperspirant may reduce foot blisters

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hikers headed out for a long trek may want to pack some extra antiperspirant — for their feet.

A study in this month's Journal of the American Academy of Dermatology says that antiperspirants may be effective in reducing foot blisters during hiking. The study warns, however, that skin irritation is a possible side effect of using antiperspirant on the feet.

Army researchers used cadets attending the U.S. Military Academy to test whether reducing moisture with antiperspirants could minimize the frictional forces that cause blisters.

The cadets were separated into two groups: One used antiperspirant on their feet before hiking, the others used a placebo. Researchers asked them to use the antiperspirants for a period of time before completing a 13-mile hike.

The researchers reported that among cadets using the preparation daily or less, fewer than half had their hike, 23 percent experienced foot blisters among those using antiperspirant, compared with 48 percent among those who used the placebo.

But reports of skin irritation among those who used the antiperspirant were five times greater: 57 percent compared with 6 percent for the placebo group.

basically telling people if you don't use enough, we don't want your business. Phone companies are competing for the high-end of the market and apparently don't care about low-volume customers anymore."

In Chicago, Seamus Glynn, associate director of the Citizens Utility Board, said $3 a month seems excessive if AT&T's only goal is to recover the bare costs of serving low-volume customers.

"Paying $36 a year just to make a few phone calls seems like a lot to me," he said.

Even though the plan explicidly exempts poor people, it's still a bad deal for consumers, said Barbara O'Connor, founding chairwoman of the Alliance for Public Technology, based in Washington.

"In some states, the (AT&T) Lifeline Program for low-income customers is heavily promoted and used, but in other states it isn't," O'Connor said. "It's good that AT&T included this exemption, but it's likely that a lot of eligible people won't hear about it."

quality, Gilmore said. The creek flows into the river.

Elevated levels of fecal contamination showed up all along the creek. The Division of Environmental Quality reported the following levels of fecal coliform:

- Near 3400 East Road, 830 parts per 100 milliliters.
- Below the Amalgamated Sugar Factory: 730 parts per 100 milliliters.
- Below the College of Southern Idaho Hatchery: 1,100 parts per 100 milliliters.
- Right above the park: 700 parts per 100 milliliters.
- Right below the park: 530 parts per 100 milliliters.

Division experts also suspect a culmination of animal waste in water coming from agricultural activities such as pastures or feedlots. One testing revealed no excessive levels on the upper end of the creek drainage where a few dairies are located.

The next step is more testing and investigation, in an attempt to identify contributors, Mr. Masters said. More results should be ready Thursday.

This is the third year in a row the creek has had high levels of fecal coliform during the summer.

If ingested, the contaminated water could cause intestinal problems. But researchers viewed indicators of potential presence of bacteria such as E. coli.

Dispute over painting ends amicably

Chicago museum welcomes valuable Degas landscape

CHICAGO (AP) — The family of two Holocaust victims and an Art Institute of Chicago benefactor have agreed to jointly transfer a valuable Degas landscape to the museum, ending the family's 50-year effort to get it back.

The heirs of Friedrich and Louise Gutmann will share ownership of "Landscape with Smokestack," a pastel made by Edgar Degas in the early 1890s, with pharmaceutical magnate Daniel C. Searle.

The work is now valued at about $1.1 million.

The agreement, reached Wednesday, stipulates that Searle will donate his share of the work to the Art Institute, and the Gutmann heirs will sell their share to the museum. The Chicago Tribune reported that they would receive about $500,000.

The Art Institute plans to exhibit the pastel starting in October with a plaque that says it is a "purchase from the collection of Friedrich and Louise Gutmann and a gift of Daniel C. Searle."

"It's an amicable ending to what's been a long and painful process," said Nick Goodman, one of the Gutmanns' grandchildren. "Everybody's happy. Mr. Searle is in his role as benefactor, my grandparents are reattached in a small but nice way to a painting that was once theirs. All of the Goodmans have closure, and the Art Institute is getting a great painting."

A settlement in the disputed ownership of "Landscape with Smokestack," a pastel by Edgar Degas, was announced Thursday in Chicago. The agreement stipulates that the heirs of two Holocaust victims and an Art Institute of Chicago benefactor will share ownership of the valuable Impressionist's work.

Goodman and his brother, Simon, have led their family's struggle to reclaim the Degas, a quest that began shortly after World War II ended. They will share the proceeds of the sale with their aunt, Lili Vera Collas Gutmann. The brothers' branch of the family changed the spelling of the name.

The family owned the pastel well before World War II and says it was stolen by the Nazis from a Paris warehouse where it had been put for safekeeping. Friedrich and Louise Gutmann died in a concentration camp after Holland was overrun by the Nazis in 1940.

After the war, the Degas eventually made its way to Searle, who bought it from an art dealer in New York for $850,000 in 1987. Searle's advisers detected nothing unusual about the Degas' origins and purchased it in good faith, according to the Art Institute.

Albright threatens Iraq, insists on cooperation with inspections

WASHINGTON (AP) — Renewing a threat of a U.S. attack on Iraq, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright insisted Friday that President Saddam Hussein resume full cooperation with U.N. weapons inspectors. "There will be no sanctions relief if we can't have inspections going on," she said.

Albright took the tough line while disputing newspaper and television reports that she had urged Richard Butler, the chief U.N. weapons inspector, to suspend surprise searches of sites suspected of concealing chemical and biological weapons material.

At a joint news conference with visiting Japanese Foreign Minister Masahiko Komura, Albright reiterated a now-familiar warning that Saddam Hussein was running the risk of a U.S. military strike.

"Let me ... make clear that if necessary, we will use force on our timetable in response to threats, and at a time and place of our choosing," she said.

However, Albright was faced with reports, including a front-page article in The Washington Post, that the administration had intervened secretly for months to dissuade the U.N. special commission from mounting surprise inspections because it wished to avoid a new crisis with Baghdad.

According to the Post, Albright urged Butler last Friday to rescind orders for "challenge inspections" at two sites in Iraq where intelligence leads suggested they could uncover forbidden weapons components and documents describing Iraqi efforts to conceal them.

Hillary Clinton keeps busy August schedule

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hillary Rodham Clinton normally spends the month of August in languid relaxation, catching up on a little reading and putting the wraps on major projects, like her second book.

But this year, there is an urgent item eclipsing everything else on the first lady's to-do list: help her husband through grand jury testimony about his alleged sexual relationship with a woman half his age.

It is a varintion of a role Mrs. Clinton has played throughout

Hillary Clinton

Bill Clinton's career, and a duty she assumed again with focused coolness as Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr began pursuing Clinton's links to former White House intern Monica Lewinsky.

When the intern allegations surfaced in January, Mrs. Clinton calmly dismissed them as part of "a vast right-wing conspiracy." She then plunged ahead as the organizing force behind the White House's response to the matter, all the while maintaining a highly public schedule of her own.

This week, she offered the odd suggestion that prejudice against Clinton's home state of Arkansas is a factor in all of the investigative scrutiny aimed at him. "They wouldn't do this if we were from another state," she told the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette.

Even in that, the first lady offered no clue of how all the talk of infidelity that undergirds Starr's investigation is weighing on her.

Some near her say it has not penetrated her steel-belted resolve, because it all is old hat for a woman who has confronted this issue for most of her adult life.

"It's like a broken record," said Lisa Caputo, Mrs. Clinton's former press secretary. "She's doing just fine. She's upbeat. She's engaged."

Appeals court throws out FDA tobacco restrictions

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A federal appeals court Friday said the Food and Drug Administration has no authority to regulate tobacco and threw out FDA restrictions on the sale of cigarettes to minors.

A three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals voted 2-1 to reverse an April 1997 ruling by U.S. District Judge William Osteen that the FDA could regulate tobacco as a drug and limit minors' access to cigarettes.

"We are of the opinion that Congress did not intend to delegate jurisdiction over tobacco products to the FDA," the appeals court said.

The regulations require stores to demand photo IDs from people in their 20s, limit outdoor advertising and vending-machine cigarette sales. The FDA regulations were challenged by tobacco companies.

"We do not dispute in this case that Congress has charged the FDA with protecting the public health and that tobacco products present serious health risks for the public," Judges H. Emory Widener and James Michael ruled.

Autism

"I like the job, but it's so stressful," says Seidl.

Because of the repetition, she says, "five minutes feels like an hour."

But the work apparently is paying off.

"He understands 'no' now," she says. "He's gotten really good at communicating."

But it's mostly nonverbal. Tacked on a wall are cards with drawings of objects. He'll bring a candy card if he wants candy or put on his shoes when he wants to go out.

"He doesn't speak now but he mumbles a lot more," his sister says. Words are "very, very rare."

After their work, they go to the pool. Robert flicks his fingers at his mouth in self-stimulation, but also giggles when Seidl splashes him and glides him on the water.

The self-stimulation is "slowly but surely going away," Seidl says. The behavior is thought to be calming to the person with autism but also interferes with learning, experts say.

Not all the work is regimented. Instruction includes teaching Robert to dress himself.

While he lies on the carpet, she puts socks on his toes and he pulls them up.

"It took us a while to teach him the over-the-head part," Seidl says.

Next, she puts shirts on his legs and he pulls them up, sometimes having trouble getting them over his diaper. "This is stuff you do with him on a day-to-day basis. Everything you do is constant work."

He has fewer tantrums and watches less television than months ago, she says. Previously, if left alone, he could watch TV for hours.

The time and work also have made Robert a more affectionate brother.

While Seidl sits on the floor, Robert unexpectedly knocks her over with a hug. She laughs.

"Before he was just there," she says, hugging him back.

Robert Casteel rushes to his sister, Sandy Seidl, to bowl her over with an exuberant hug.

Changes

During the summer Robert came home to Twin Falls most weekends.

"I miss Robert when I say, 'I'm mom,'" Tammie Casteel says, during a week in June when Robert was home.

Robert sits at the dining room table, methodically picking up pieces of Cap'n Crunch cereal with his fingers. A few months ago, he used to toss food off his tray so he had to eat in the kitchen.

"He's a good boy," says Tammie Casteel, a woman with fission-like energy.

"I'm a good child," adds Mark, Robert's 4-year-old brother, also wanting attention.

The house is full of boxes in mid-July, as the family prepares to move to Boise. The phone rings constantly with friends and potential renters of their Twin Falls home. Tammie Casteel moves quickly from phone to children to the door, where people have arrived to repair glass windows.

"The woman I'm buying the (Boise) house from has seven children and one autistic child," she says with a smile. Still, she is anxious.

In the midst of their moving preparations, husband Chris Casteel was preparing to go to Texas for months of training for his employer, the Internal Revenue Service.

"I'm nervous about moving to Boise. I have no friends there," Tammie Casteel says.

Teen-age daughter Jasmine also is sad about leaving friends behind.

But the family says Boise is the best place for Robert to receive the intensive instruction he needs. After doing research, Tammie Casteel became an advocate for the 30 hours a week of one-to-one instruction that he'll receive at the Boise program starting this fall, compared to home instruction that may offer a few hours a day.

"And not all parents have the luxury of staying home," she says.

For now, home instruction and preschool have helped.

"He seems to be doing better. He'll sit down when you tell him to and come when his name is called — and with M&Ms," his mother says. "He said 'I love you' and 'I get you' in baby language. He'll grab other kids' hands, and he never used to do that."

Robert even looks you in the eye for a few seconds.

Autistic children usually don't make eye contact. One year ago, his mother characterized it as almost looking through you.

"So he's doing well in some aspects and not well in others," she says.

Earlier this year Robert had a setback. A physician prescribed Prozac to help him sleep. Children with autism often have poor sleeping habits.

But the medication seemed to alter Robert's personality. Instead of a smiling child, Robert became aggressive, biting and showing more frustration.

"He wasn't Robert," Tammie Casteel recalls.

"He was the evil Robert," Mark says.

For the first time, he bit his mother. But they switched medication, and Robert seems back on track.

The family is riding on hope.

A cousin heard a lecture about the work with autistic children by a University in Utah research center in Salt Lake City. Tammie Casteel called the next day.

By treating epilepsy found in some autistic children, the center found autistic symptoms also improved. In mid-May Robert was taken for an examination at the center. One month later, the family heard his profile is similar to children who benefitted from epilepsy surgery. Robert first will be placed on anti-epileptic medication.

Tammie Casteel had never seen her son have a seizure but noticed he would regress on his learning whenever he was ill.

She also was impressed with the Utah physicians.

"They know their stuff," she says. "That's the best news about the autism. God will provide somewhere."

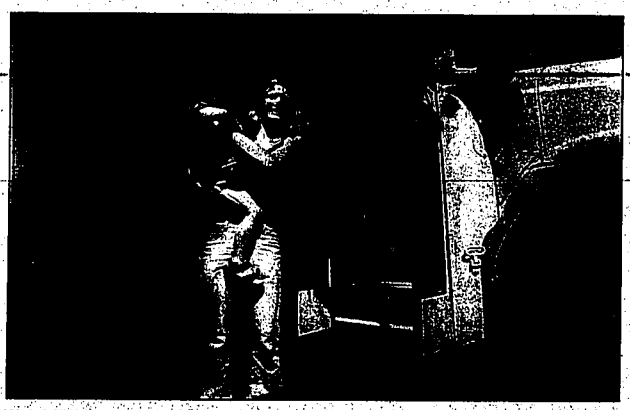

Robert's condition may improve with surgery, and without a life on medications, his father says.

"I'm excited about this thing with Robert," Chris Casteel adds.

Tammie Casteel's optimism is more guarded. She realizes her son has a ways to go to reach his abilities, but then again, it's a journey every parent faces.

"I see so many changes," she says. "It's little steps. The light is going on for little Robert. It's a little awakening."

Times-News staff writer Pat Marcantonio can be reached at 733-0931, Ext. 242.

Sandy Seidl picks up her brother from the bus stop in front of her apartment. Robert Casteel has been living with Seidl in Boise while the rest of the family prepares to move from Twin Falls.

Amid piles of boxes yet to be unpacked, Robert shares a package of crackers with his older sibling Chris.

'I see so many changes. It's little steps. The light is going on for little Robert. It's a little awakening.'

Research

For example, an electroencephalogram — better known as EEG or analysis of the brain's electrical activity — detects epilepsy in about 25 percent of autistic children. But the center tests picked it up in 80 percent of 30 children under study, Chong said.

Often, the children showed no signs of seizure. But during sleep, their brains had constant epileptic activity.

MSI has been used mainly as a research tool since the early 1980s. But radiology department chairman Dr. William Orrison recruited Chong and Jeffery Lewine, who has a master's degree in neuroscience, for the center. Its primary direction: apply the technology to cases, making it one of six sites in the United States to do so.

MSI can help evaluate brain tumors, head trauma, schizophrenia, depression, learning disabilities, dementia and autism, the center said. Staff members already had used the technology for epilepsy and saw how epilepsy treatments helped children who also had autism, he said. So they took their study one step further.

They focused on a rarer, but classic type of autism called Landau-Kleffner syndrome, where a child develops normally almost until the age of 4 to 5, then regresses. Mostly, they lose their ability to express or understand language and acquire autistic behaviors.

By administering anti-epileptic medications to autistic children, researchers found "language skills came back" in about 10 percent of cases, Chong said.

"And if you had added high-dose steroids, the results were even better. We found that 50 percent of kids do show a response," he said.

Steroids are used to treat epilepsy and Landau-Kleffner syndrome.

The children also received behavior therapy and intensive attention. One mother reported her child was toilet trained within two weeks and captured a limited vocabulary.

"They often learn a phenomenal amount," he said.

If the children don't respond in six to eight weeks, they are taken off steroids. Continued use negatively affects blood pressure and blood sugar.

But a favorable response indicates a reversible condition. That's where neurosurgery may come in.

One theory says cells are organized in columns that communicate and "crystallize" knowledge in a developing brain. But epilepsy's electrical activity moves horizontally through the columns, Chong said. At a crucial time it will, in effect, scramble what is learned.

A neurosurgeon severs the abnormal brain pathways of the epileptic lesion without loss of cells.

"I like to think of it as quieting down the brain," the physicism said.

Fourteen autistic children have had the surgery and parents report good results, he said. But a one-year period is too early for conclusions.

"We're very excited about these results, but we are very cautious," Chong said.

The center, which plans to publish its findings, has met obstacles elsewhere.

A major problem is getting insurers to pay for the MSI procedure, he said. Clearly, the tests used are acceptable for epilepsy treatment, but some insurers balked at paying because they were used on children with autism.

Compare the examination cost — $2,500 to $7,000 — to the cost of caring for children with autism, estimated at $12 million per year nationwide.

"That is a huge savings," Chong said.

What is autism?

Autism is considered a brain disorder interfering with a child's development. Signs usually appear in the first three years of a child's life. It includes a wide spectrum of behaviors, including deficiencies in communication, social skills and play activities; aggressiveness; short attention span; odd sensory responses; sleeping disorders and repeated body movements, such as hand flapping or rocking.

Autism is the third most common developmental disability in the United States.

Last year, there were 189 autistic children in Idaho schools with 24 in the Magic Valley. Nine children diagnosed with infantile autism, a type of autism also covered by state services, the state Child Development Center said.

Tommy Bellinger reconnects into his truck while working his route for Mashburn Disposal Tuesday in Encinitas, Calif. Bellinger has some of those jobs that are classified as 'dirty' by most people, but according to researcher Blake Ashford, those people doing those jobs don't see them that way.

Workers with stigmatized jobs mostly shrug off public's disrespect

SAN DIEGO (AP) — It's a dirty job, but Fred Dean figures he might as well be the one to do it.

Dean's job is scraping dead animals off San Diego's streets.

"It gives me peace of mind. I'm making good money, and put food on the table and a roof over my head. And I'll know my job is not going anywhere," he says. "There'll always going to be a need for somebody like me."

In fact, people like Dean — garbage collectors, hospital orderlies, bail bondsmen, strippers and others who work in jobs most folks find either physically, morally or morally tainted — benefit, particularly bothered by the stigma, according to researcher Blake Ashford, who presented a study titled "How Can You Do It?"

Dirty Work and the Dilemma of Identity" at the Academy of Management's annual meeting this week in San Diego.

At the conference of scholars, with primarily study Fortune 500 corporations and their managers, Ashford and a few colleagues devoted a session to stigmatized jobs and the attitudes of those who perform them.

"They find merit in their work and take pride in doing a good job or providing a service, and to heck with everyone else," says Ashford, who conducted his study with Glen Kreiner, a fellow business professor at Arizona State University.

Dean, for example, can tell you there's a right way and a wrong way to scraping up roadkill dogs, cats, possums and skunks and putting them into the back of a pickup.

> 'They find merit in their work and take pride in doing a good job or providing a service, and to heck with everyone else.'
> —Blake Ashford, researcher

"You have to be careful when handling a black and white. That's what we call skunks," Dean says. "As long as you don't break that pouch, you're OK. If you do, you can smell the truck coming miles away."

The dead-animal removal officer says his job "may not be pretty, but it beats being on a street corner begging for money or putting a gun to somebody's head at a bank."

Kreiner quotes a gravedigger who was asked how he liked his job as saying: "If you stop and think, a funeral is one of the natural things in the world. I enjoy it very much, especially in the summer."

Kreiner says those who work in stigmatized professions often form an "us vs. them" mentality. A prison guard who is uncomfortable about answering the question: "What do you do?" may instead socialize with fellow guards.

Workers with dirty jobs also tend to marry people in the same line of work or pass the profession down to their children, Ashford says.

Kelly Smith, spokesman for the National Funeral Directors Association, says 60 percent of the organization's 20,000-member funeral homes are family operations, many of them second- and third-generation businesses.

"The things the public view as the most negative about the job, they view as the least," Smith says. "The most rewarding aspect is helping people deal with the loss of a family member. They don't think of it as working with dead bodies."

Pentagon begins inoculations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon will begin a program next week to inoculate all U.S. troops against the deadly threat of anthrax.

Troops in the Persian Gulf began getting the shots earlier this year. The next round of vaccinations will be for men and women serving in Southeast Asia and Korea, the Pentagon said Friday. All of the 2.4 million active and reserve forces will be inoculated by about 2004.

"This is an efficient, effective and safe way to protect our forces against an emerging threat," Cohen said.

In December, Cohen issued the order to inoculate troops against a potential biological attack. The series of shots for men and women in uniform began in the Persian Gulf because chances were deemed highest there for an attack by Iraq.

Track maintenance employees strike against Conrail

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A federal judge ordered 9,400 striking Conrail employees to return to work Friday, just hours after the track maintenance workers walked out, shutting down the leading railroad's operations.

U.S. District Judge James T. Giles issued the temporary restraining order pending a full hearing Aug. 27 on Conrail's contention that the strike is illegal.

"This is undoubtedly in line with what we have said before that they don't have the right to strike," said Conrail spokesman Bud Tidball.

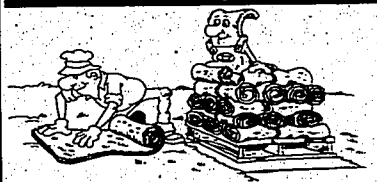

The ruling came hours after 9,400 workers walked out over Conrail's use of outside contractors to build tracks in Marysville, Ohio. The union, the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, said Conrail promised in writing not to contract out the work.

"They didn't even notify us that they were," union General Chairman Bud Todd said Friday. "We found out about it when the contractor showed up to install track."

Todd said the union has protested to Conrail but the railroad has not replied.

The strike shut down all movement on Conrail, the nation's fifth largest freight rail company. It moves about 7 percent of the nation's freight volume.

Good news can't halt month-long slide

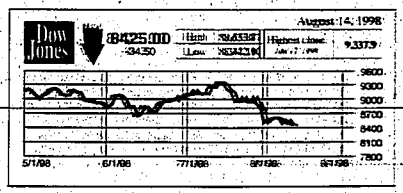

The Associated Press

NEW YORK— A huge gain by J.P. Morgan cushioned the Dow for now, but the monthlong slide from record highs reached 10 percent on Friday for the stock market's other well-known barometer, the S&P 500.

An early rally fizzled for the second straight day, with the Dow Jones industrial average surrendering a 97-point gain before finishing with a loss of 34.50 at 8,425.00, down 173.02 for the week.

It was the lowest close since late February for the Dow, which now sits about 913 points, or 9.8 percent, below the July 17 record of 9,337.97.

But while the equivalent of a 38-point gain by J.P. Morgan helped avert the Dow's first 10 percent "correction" since last October's selloff, the Standard & Poor's 500-stock list fell 12.16 to 1,062.75 on Friday, finishing the week 10.4 percent below its mid-July peak.

J.P. Morgan rose 9 5/8 to 125 7/8 after Business Week reported that the Wall Street firm is discussing a merger with a major European bank.

Before a late pullback, Morgan's shares actually rose as much as 18 points, or the equivalent of 72 points on the Dow, which in just one month has seen this year's gain shrink from 18.1 percent to 6.5 percent.

Friday's downturn came despite big rebounds in Hong Kong and Moscow stock exchanges after several days of steep declines spurred by the deepening economic crises in Asia and Russia.

The selloffs in those markets had served as key sparks in the Dow's 258-point plunge during Tuesday's session.

"What we have is a very weak market internally," said Steven Goldman, market strategist, Weeden & Co., in Greenwich, Conn.

Before the rally, the Dow closed Friday at 8,598.02, or 77½ points below that high.

Not everyone agreed, of course, until by Wednesday bullish analysts were weighing in. Abby Joseph Cohen at Goldman Sachs said the market's 9 percent drop since July 17 was an overreaction to liability, negative news on corporate earnings, unfounded worries about inflation and excessive preoccupation with the Asian financial crisis. Stocks will rise 20 percent over the next 18 months, she predicted.

That sounds reassuring. But by recent standards, it's not all that bullish. A 20 percent rise from Tuesday's close of 8,487 would be a gain of only 9 percent from the July 17 high. Over an 18-month period cited by Cohen, that's an annualized gain of about 6 percent.

Pretty pathetic compared to the 37 percent, 27 percent and 25 percent gains in 1995, '96 and '97. A 6 percent annual gain doesn't give you much of a premium to justify the risk of investing in stocks. You can earn almost that much with absolutely safe Treasury bonds.

Long-term investors probably can afford to shrug this off. Even if stocks did return only 6 percent or 8 percent in the next year or so, their annual average in the

Asia, GM pound industrial production

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON— The combination of the Asia crisis and the General Motors strikes pounded the nation's industrial production for the worst two-month decline since the start of the 1990-91 recession.

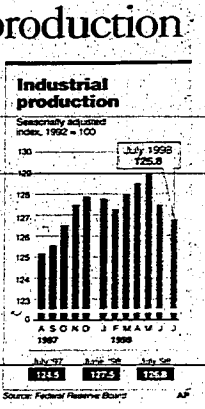

On the bright side, weakness spilling from Asia helped keep a lid on prices charged by factories and other producers. They rose a modest 0.2 percent in July, the Labor Department said Friday.

"With Asia down for the count and much of the rest of the world wobbling, this comes as no surprise," said economist Oscar Gonzalez of John Hancock in Boston. "This means U.S. consumers will continue to benefit from low inflation."

Production at factories, mines and utilities fell a seasonally-adjusted 0.6 percent last month, on top of a 1.1 percent plunge in June, the Federal Reserve said. It was the largest two-month drop since November-December 1990.

In this case, much — though certainly not all — of the weakness was temporary. GM strikes idling more than 190,000 workers began early in June and ended late in July. Motor vehicle output dropped from an annual rate of 12.4 million in May to 8.3 million in July.

But even excluding autos, industrial production would have edged up only 0.1 percent in July after declining 0.4 percent in June.

Source: Federal Reserve Board AP

"Over the last six months, factory production excluding automobiles has been flat," said economist Stan Shipley of Merrill Lynch. "July's slowdown in production was widespread."

A third factor depressing production is a buildup in inventories of unsold goods early in the year.

So, companies in the spring and summer have produced far fewer goods for inventory.

Nervous about stocks? Here's how you might pare down

By Jeff Brown
The Philadelphia Inquirer

Long-term investors probably can afford to shrug this off. But why not make some defensive moves anyway — if only so you'll sleep better?

By now, Tuesday's nearly 300-point plunge in the Dow may seem like ancient history. Who cares? The drop didn't trigger a crash, after all. Three hundred points isn't such a big deal on a percentage basis.

And the market always recovers, doesn't it? Isn't that why investors have learned to "buy on the dips"?

Yeah, but the ominous signs keep on mounting, making this a good time to look at how you'll fare if the market really turns sour.

Many market watchers think Tuesday's drop was sparked by Prudential Securities analyst Ralph Acampora, who said he no longer expected the Dow to reach 10,000 by the end of the year but to drop 15 percent to 20 percent from its high of 9,338 July 17. The

Want a raise? It's your responsibility to ask

By Carol Kleiman
Chicago Tribune

Negotiating for a salary increase isn't something that most employees relish, but if you feel you're underpaid you have to do it — even though it would be much nicer if the company came to you and filled your pockets with money in recognition of your valuable contributions.

But it doesn't work that way. You have to do the negotiating.

"It's your job — not your employer's — to keep current on what your worth is in the marketplace," said Sally Blount, associate professor of behavioral science at the University of Chicago Graduate School of Business. "When there's a discrepancy, you need to let someone know that there is one. Avoiding the subject is not the most powerful stance to take in life."

Even salary experts have to prove their worth.

In 1996, Michael O'Malley, who had headed his own consulting firm for seven years, was hired as a management and compensation consultant for William M. Mercer Inc. in New York. His initial compensation, which matched what he had been earning, was in the six figures.

"My reason for taking the job wasn't money," said O'Malley, who has a doctorate in social psychology, "but money becomes an issue when you see you're doing work others aren't."

After completing two "hugely successful, high-profile projects," he asked for a raise. "After about two months of discussion, I got a 40 percent increase," said the consultant.

Not everyone is as skilled — or as well-paid — as O'Malley, author of "Are you paid what you're worth? The complete guide to negotiating the salary, benefits, bonus and raise you deserve." (Broadway, $15). But since 25 percent of all U.S. workers are underpaid, according to an estimate by O'Malley, somebody's got to do it. You.

The first step is familiar: Do your homework. "Find out if you're at the midpoint of your salary range, which is where you want to be," said O'Malley. "Try to find out what colleagues are making. Check with the Labor Department and professional associations. Study internal job postings, which often give salary ranges."

Then, at the right time, ask for a meeting. "The wrong time is at your annual review," O'Malley said. "The bucket of money for merit raises already is reserved. The right time is when you've done something noteworthy — that's when the company wants you most."

Don't only discuss money, he warns. "Start out by asking why you're paid what you're paid. Then, show that you're more valuable because you're a key performer. Have a figure in mind." And don't be confrontational. Don't complain. Don't whine. But do speak up. "What usually happens is that you get some kind of increase, even if it isn't as much as you want."

Stocks

'90s would top 16 percent. That's nearly double the historical stock market returns. An occasional down period is just part of the game, and stocks have recovered nicely from previous declines.

But why not make some defensive moves anyway — if only so you'll sleep better?

Many investors are loath to pull out of the market for fear of missing further gains. You wouldn't miss much, however, if you shift just part of your portfolio from stocks to cash. A portfolio that's 70 percent stocks, 20 percent bonds and 10 percent cash would gain 15.6 percent if stocks returned 20 percent, bonds 6 percent and cash 4 percent. If the stocks were trimmed to 60 percent of the portfolio, cash was increased to 20 percent, and all the performances stayed the same, the portfolio would return a nearly-as-good 14 percent. And if stocks declined, you'd have that cash as an emergency reserve — or to buy on the dip.

Selling stocks may be a bit less onerous under the tax rules enacted last month as part of the IRS reform. Now, assets need be held only 12 months, rather than 18, to qualify for the lowest capital gains tax rate of 20 percent. Previously, assets held between 12 and 18 months could be taxed at 28 percent.

What to sell?

Anything that doesn't look promising, of course. Start with the losers you don't expect to turn around. By selling those, you can declare a loss to offset profits on other investments, minimizing capital gains tax.

Even if you haven't sold profit-making investments, you could use losses to offset any taxable profits you realize through year-end capital gains distributions from your mutual funds.

Want to avoid the tax mess? Then do your stock trimming in your 401(k), 403(b) or IRA. Shift to a money market fund within the tax-sheltered account, and you won't have to pay tax or early-withdrawal penalty on the profits from the stocks or stock funds.

You can always shift back when you think the market's going to perk up. It most certainly will — someday.

JUST HOT AIR?

Clinton-Gore are right

This summer's horrendous heat wave is sneak preview of global warming

JOHN PASSACANTANDO

The president and vice president have been sprinkling their speeches with comments about the severe climate events that we have been weathering this year like record droughts, record deaths from heat, record fires and the hottest months and hottest decade since the 1400s.

Our climate system is acting like an Olympic athlete who just discovered a foolproof way to avoid performance-enhancing drug detection.

Immediately, a tired but predictable chorus of skeptics, from Capitol Hill to conservative think-tanks, is on the defensive, upset by the mere mention of climate change. What is going on here?

Clinton and Gore are only saying what more than 2,000 scientists from around the world have already said: "The balance of evidence ... suggests a discernible human influence on global climate."

Nobody is saying that any particular event is caused by human induced climate change – that would be like saying that a cigarette smoked during a college frat party 20 years ago gave someone cancer. What they are saying is that these severe weather events are exactly what scientists, those not on the payroll of the oil and coal companies, keep telling us to expect more of. That is, unless we reduce our addiction to fossil fuels.

So why would Congress take issue with the Clinton administration for addressing an issue that the U.S. electorate is so concerned about? Well, PAC contributions from the National Association of Manufacturers or the American Petroleum Institute certainly help.

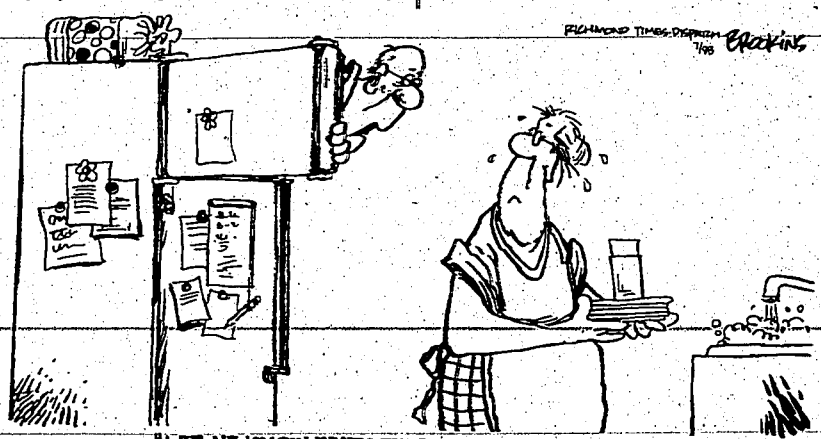

Indeed, Congress actually tried a few weeks ago to put a gag order on the Environmental Protection Agency to keep the bureaucrats from even talking about climate change. Welcome back, Joe McCarthy.

To the Clinton administration's credit, they are being quite eloquent about the threats we face from climate change. The administration trembles with knock-kneed fear, however, when it comes to advancing real policy measures to reduce our dependence on fossil fuels. So the public waits increasingly ed-ucated about the threats from global warming, with ever more hapless politicians in charge.

Nevertheless, the lobbyists and spin doctors for the oil, coal and car companies are ensuring that the U.S. will be a global loser as this great technology craze takes off. So go ahead and listen as the fossil-fuel lobbyists bad-mouth the president and vice president for talking in the public about what is increasingly the most obvious global threat we have ever faced. It's their right as Americans.

But remember, after trying for 30 years to discredit the link between smoking and lung cancer, those highly paid tobacco lobbyists, CEOs and other flacks are looking pretty darn foolish these days.

John Passacantando is the executive director of Ozone Action, an environmental group dedicated to enhancing air quality. Readers may write him at Ozone Action, 1536 Connecticut Ave. NW, Third Floor, Washington, D.C. 20009.

In the meantime, companies throughout Europe and Asia are not conducting expensive public relations and lobbying campaigns against measures to reduce global dependence on fossil fuels.

Instead, they are retooling so they can dominate a world in which consumers and companies will use fossil fuels more intelligently. Why buy an appliance, car or home that will require you to make higher payments to Exxon and the power companies forever, when a smarter product can put that money in your pocket?

Enviro flim-flam men

Clinton and Gore politicize the weather by linking heat wave to global warming

DAVID A. RIDENOUR

The only unusually hot air that's been blowing this summer has come from the White House, not from global warming.

At a recent speech before the American Federation of Teachers, President Clinton blamed the recent heat waves on global warming, saying: "As you can see from this sweltering heat, the vice president is right: The climate of our country and our globe is changing."

There are two major problems with the president's assertion.

First, local weather events tell us little about global climate. Because it is unusually warm in one area of the world does not mean the entire planet is warming.

Indeed, data from NASA's TIROS series of weather satellites indicate that there has been no global warming and perhaps, depending on how you interpret the data, a slight cooling trend of 0.04 degrees Celsius since 1979.

The second, more obvious problem with the president's assertion is that the heat waves in the South and West are neither very unusual, nor record-breaking.

Los Angeles hit its record high of 109 degrees on July 12, 1891, to cap off an extended heat wave; Death Valley hit a record-setting 134 degrees on July 10, 1913; Salt Lake City broke 107 degrees on July 26, 1960; and Little Rock hit 112 degrees on July 31, 1986.

If any period of American history can be considered its hottest, it would have to be the 1930s. During that decade, 25 states established their record highs – 15 of them established their record highs in 1936 alone.

Nonetheless, the national news has been filled with reports that 1998 has been the warmest summer in history. One such report claimed that June 1998 was Huntsville, Ala.'s warmest June ever, at an average daily temperature of 80.5 degrees.

But Dr. John Christy, associate professor of atmospheric science at the University of Alabama in Huntsville, has proved otherwise.

After reviewing more than 100 years worth of temperature records – including handwritten forms – Christy found that while June 1998 was indeed hot, it was not as hot as June 1943, 1952 or 1953, when the average temperatures at the Huntsville airport were 80.8 degrees, 83.0 degrees and 81.7 degrees, respectively.

It was also not as hot as June 1914 when the average temperature at Valley Head (elevation 1,031 feet) soared to 81.3 degrees – well above Huntsville's June 1998 reading, despite its higher elevation.

Christy concluded that the report of record temperatures must have been based on digitized records of the National Weather Service, which are incomplete. The weather service has temperature records for Huntsville going back to only 1958.

The loss of 130 people's lives is a very real tragedy and should not have been used to promote a political agenda. As tragic as that death toll is, however, it's important to remember that even more lives have been lost to heat waves in the past. A heat wave in Chicago in 1915, for example, claimed 535 lives. Heat waves in Los Angeles in 1939, 1955, and 1963 claimed 546 lives, 946 lives and 580 lives, respectively. During the 40 year period 1936-1975, an estimated 20,000 people died of heat-related causes – equal to 500 people per year.

What makes 1998 different than other years is not that there is an unprecedented heat wave but that a president of the United States would use the human suffering resulting from a heat wave to promote his own political agenda.

Level playing field: How about applying affirmative action to baseball?

AL DOMINICK

To understand why affirmative action fails the basic test of fairness, imagine what would happen if we applied it to a world where the only thing that matters is merit.

Like baseball.

If affirmative action were used on the baseball diamond, a player's individual talent would matter less than the color of his skin. This would have interesting ramifications.

The coaching staff's primary concern would be making every "underrepresented" minority on the lineup. To ensure diversity, a manager might be forced to start a white player on the mound, an Asian at third, two Hispanics up the middle, and an African-American at first. The manager might even have to give special preferences to those who can't play the game to ensure the inclusion of the athletically challenged.

In the case of college baseball, coaches could do this by considering extra-curricular activities as a way to determine their roster. The math wiz who can calculate 15 algorithms in an hour but bats .121 would make a great shortstop, wouldn't he? And the kid who taught the school how to recycle paper clips but has a 43.97 earned run average could be the pitcher. Sure the team would lose a lot, but at least it would be diverse.

To really even things out, so we don't hurt the self-esteem of the underachievers, we'd also have to penalize the players with too much ability to prevent them from being "overrepresented" in the game. Mark McGwire's home-runs would count only if they traveled more than 450 feet. And right-handed pitcher Pedro Martinez would have to pitch left-handed in a pair of dress shoes.

To ensure equality at the coaching level, we could limit managers like Tony LaRussa of the St. Louis Cardinals and Jim Leyland of the Florida Marlins to five innings per game to give lesser managers a chance against such "geniuses."

To really even things out, so we don't hurt the self-esteem of the underachievers, we'd also have to penalize the players with too much ability to prevent them from being "overrepresented" in the game

It also doesn't seem fair that the University of Florida is so much better than my Division III team at Washington & Lee University. Why not spot us 20 runs to give us an equal opportunity to win?

Fortunately, baseball doesn't operate this way. The rules of the game apply equally to all, and nobody enjoys special preferences. You'll never find a player getting four strikes instead of three because he's white. Nor will you see a player having to run 80 feet instead of 90 to score the winning run from third because he's black.

On the contrary, baseball rewards skill – and skill alone. Good hitting, pitching and fielding are everything. The only diversity that matters is diversity of skill.

We'd never dream of applying racial preferences to baseball because they would destroy the sport. Baseball would become a "game of inclusion" where personnel policies would require each team's roster to mirror the racial and ethnic makeup of the community in which the franchise operates. That would be ridiculous. When I take the field, I do so with the knowledge that the other eight players have all achieved a certain level of success through competition. To expect anything less would be to concede defeat.

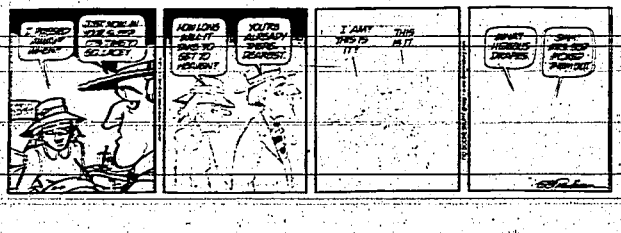

At one time it was baseball that needed to learn from society that discrimination based on race has no place in America. Now it is society that needs to learn the same lesson from baseball, where people are judged on merit, and merit alone.

As Ward Connerly, a black man and one of the country's leading opponents of affirmative action, put it recently in Parade magazine, we can continue to believe that "blacks, women and other minorities are incapable of competing without a handicap. Or we can resume the journey to a fair and inclusive society."

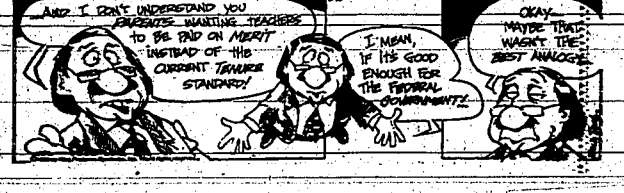

A society that, like baseball, has a level playing field.

Randy Weaver talks to the media after arriving at the Andrews Airport in Andrews, N.C., Thursday. Weaver arrived with former Green Beret James "Bo" Gritz, who is in Andrews to try to find Alabama abortion clinic bombing suspect Eric Rudolph and convince him to surrender. Weaver said he can understand what Rudolph's family is going through because his wife and son were shot to death by federal sharpshooters during the standoff at Ruby Ridge.

Idaho hospital warns patient of possible unsterile tools

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Administrators at Columbia Eastern Idaho Regional Medical Center have warned at least one patient that a breakdown in a sterilization process failed to ensure operating tools were thoroughly cleaned.

Michael Gentry was at home recovering from spinal surgery in late July when he got a call from a hospital official.

Louis Corkin, the hospital's risk management director, told Gentry the surgical instruments used during his July 17 operation might not have been sterile, Gentry said.

The same day, Gentry received a letter dated July 20 signed by Corkin. "Due to an unforeseen breakdown in our central supply sterilization process, there is reason to believe some of the instruments used during your operative procedure ... were not sterile," reads the letter.

While hospital officials would not discuss this particular case, the medical center's chief executive officer, Ron Butler, acknowledged there had been a temporary problem with the sterilization of some medical instruments. He did not know how many people had received letters like Gentry's, and said it was an isolated incident that has been dealt with.

"This was only on a particular day and only on very few instruments and all physicians and all patients have been notified and it has been fixed," he said.

Commission delays new standards plan

BOISE (AP) — The schedule has been set back for completing a plan to raise the minimum level of academic achievement required to graduate from Idaho high schools.

Lydia Guerra, the state Department of Education coordinator for the project, said on Friday that the 10-member Exiting Standards Commission does not want to rush the process by setting arbitrary deadlines.

Commissioners had hoped to present the state Board of Education a final draft of the proposed standards in December. Instead, the subcommittees working on standards for each of five core subject areas will not start on a third and possible final draft until February, Guerra said.

Release of a second draft initially was scheduled for early September, but that now has been pushed back to Sept. 28 after a Sept. 10-11 commission meeting to review the work.

Police arrest woman in child's death

ALPINE, Utah (AP) — Police on Friday arrested a 25-year-old Orem woman in the death of an infant found wrapped in a quilt at the mouth of American Fork Canyon earlier this month.

Darcie Jo Baum was booked into the Utah County Jail after her arrest about 2:30 a.m. Lawmen were led to Baum after they identified the owner of the hand-tied quilt in which the infant's body was wrapped, said Alpine-Highland police chief Kip Botkin.

Botkin said it appears Baum delivered the child at a home in Orem and then abandoned it near the mouth of the canyon, where it was found by a jogger on Aug. 4.

Volunteers prepare to bring out Rudolph

ANDREWS, N.C. (AP) — From as far away as Oregon, Missouri and Massachusetts they came Friday to help James "Bo" Gritz try to coax abortion clinic bombing suspect Eric Rudolph out of hiding.

Gritz assembled 40 men, women and children, handed out red, white and blue scarves and hats with "Rebel" printed on the back and readied them for their first expedition into the woods early Saturday. They plan to stay a week.

"I think he's scared of everybody," said Kyle Mathis, 16, of Chattanooga, Tenn., who will end his summer vacation camping with the volunteers, including his father, Dave Mathis, and their 15-year-old schnauzer, Twister.

"How would you feel if 400 armed Marines were looking for you?" the younger Mathis said, using a favorite Gritz phrase to describe the mission. "We're not out here to try to contact Eric. We're here to tell him, 'We're not going to hurt you.'"

Gritz is a leader of the so-called patriot movement, which rails against a United Nations-led "New World Order" and accuses the government of corruption and violence. He now lives in what he calls a "covenant community" he founded in north-central Idaho called Almost Heaven.

Gritz helped negotiate an end to the FBI siege at Ruby Ridge, Idaho, in 1992 and briefly was a mediator in the Montana Freemen standoff in 1996.

Rudolph, 31, has been a fugitive since the Jan. 29 bombing of the New Woman All Women abortion clinic in Birmingham, Ala., that killed an off-duty policeman and severely injured a nurse.

The search shifted to this area in February after Rudolph's pickup truck was found 10 miles south of here. He surfaced again early in July and obtained six months' worth of supplies at a home before disappearing back into the rugged western North Carolina mountains.

"This is not entertainment, folks," Gritz, a former Green Beret colonel, told the volunteers. "It could be the difference for Eric Rudolph — life or death."

Motorcyclist injured in accident in TF

TWIN FALLS – A motorcycle rider suffered severe injuries Friday evening when he lost control and went off the road.

Tommy Webster, 21, of Twin Falls, was westbound on 3800 North at about 7 p.m. when he lost control in a curve. He went off the road and through a fence, the Twin Falls Sheriff's Office reported.

He was not wearing a helmet, the report said. He was expected to be flown to Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise Friday evening.

The sheriff's office did not know whether alcohol was involved.

Jerome gets federal juvenile justice grant

JEROME – Jerome recently received a $9,791 chunk of a federal grant aimed at improving the juvenile justice system at the state and local levels.

The Juvenile Accountability Incentive Block Grants have provided a total $250 million across the country, given mostly to local jurisdictions, said a press release from Jerome City Hall.

The money is earmarked for specific improvements, including building detention centers, hiring prosecutors, establishing gun courts, beefing up probation programs and establishing drug testing in the juvenile justice system.

States must adopt accountability-based reforms to qualify. Those reforms include allowing prosecutors to charge youths 15 and older as adults for violent crimes, opening juvenile felony records to the public and allowing judges to issue court orders calling for parental supervision of offenders.

To learn more about how the program is working in Idaho, contact the Department of Juvenile Corrections at 400 N. 10th (second floor), P.O. Box 83720, Boise. Or call 334-5100.

Sen. Craig will be guest at FHS's grand opening

TWIN FALLS – Family Health Services will celebrate the grand opening of its new offices next week with Idaho Sen. Larry Craig as a special guest.

The event will be held 8:30 to 9:30 a.m. Wednesday at 388 Martin St. A ribbon cutting is set for 8:45 a.m. with the help of the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce.

The building formerly was occupied by the Pediatric Center, which has moved to the medical office building at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center.

Family Health Services is a private, nonprofit corporation that operates clinics in Twin Falls, Buhl, Burley and Jackpot, Nev.

It was started in 1983 to provide health care to migrant and seasonal workers and their families, but it's now available to anyone.

TF Department of Disaster will hold full-scale exercise

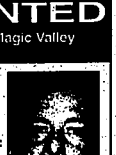

TWIN FALLS – Twin Falls County's Department of Disaster Services will hold a full-scale exercise from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursday at Robert Stuart Junior High School.

Local Red Cross, EMS, police and fire personnel will respond to the mock event.

Reents speaks out

TWIN FALLS – In Paris and elsewhere around Europe, coffee houses have long percolated with intense political discussion.

Friday afternoon, though, the Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor turned the tables a Java cafe in Twin Falls – where coffee houses themselves are a recent innovation – into a political round table worthy of the Left Bank.

Sue Reents

Former state Sen. Sue Reents is making the rounds as the underdog challenging incumbent C.L. "Butch" Otter, who is seeking a fourth term as the state's number two. Reents, a Boise Democrat, stopped in Twin Falls Friday in a tour of southeastern Idaho. Along with her Java discussion, Reents met with The Times-News' editorial board.

Jury indicts 3 people in Iruegas killing

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS – Three suspects in last month's killing of Javier Iruegas will face murder charges in 5th District Court Monday after being named in a grand jury indictment.

The indictment charges Nicholas Garcia, 19, Antonio Garcia, 19, and Alfredo Ortiz, 17, with first-degree murder and conspiracy to commit first-degree murder.

The indictment was revealed Friday during a hotly contested hearing for Ortiz in Magistrate Court.

The suspects were charged with first-degree murder July 31, and a preliminary hearing was set for next month to decide whether enough evidence existed to send the case to district court.

The indictment supercedes the previous charges and sends the case directly to district court and toward trial.

The suspects will be arraigned Monday morning.

Iruegas, 23, was shot in the head in a drive-by shooting July 29 at the El Milagro Housing Complex.

The get-away car sped through Twin Falls and into Jerome County, where the suspects live, a Twin Falls police news release said.

Authorities found the car abandoned in a barn, but they later caught the suspects in a truck.

A 17-year-old boy was arrested two days later in Jerome and charged with accessory to murder and concealing evidence. He faces those charges in Jerome County.

Jerome chooses new chief

But officials won't release name

By Mark Hailey
Times-News writer

JEROME – City officials have chosen who they want to be Jerome's next police chief.

However, the candidate has not accepted the job as of Friday afternoon, and has not been informed of the decision, Mayor Dennis Moore said.

Meanwhile, Jerome's city attorney and an attorney representing The Times-News tried to determine whether the city was bound by law to release the names and resumes of applicants for the chief's position.

Moore said he, City Council members and other officials interviewed the top three candidates Thursday. These finalists had been chosen from 22 applicants.

The choice for chief, Moore said, is down-to-earth and hard-working.

"He wants to wear a uniform, and he wants to go out on patrol," Moore said.

He declined to name the successful candidate, saying the city had been unable to contact him Friday, so he could officially accept the job.

Moore also said he would prefer to wait until Tuesday's City Council meeting to introduce the new chief.

Former chief Jim Dahl resigned Aug. 1, citing philosophical differences with the mayor, and disdain over what he called micromanagment of the department.

The names of only a few applicants have been made public. Those included Jerome County Sheriff's Capt. Gerald Brant, former sheriff and police chief George "Pee Wee" Silver III and interim police chief Dean Larsen.

Moore said the withheld applicants' names and resumes to protect the candidates' privacy and prevent them from getting into trouble with their current employers.

But two recent Idaho court cases involving reporters' requests for information about municipal applicants weigh in

Panel questions 4 judicial candidates

By Jennifer Sandmann

BURLEY – Four candidates for a vacant judgeship in Burley talked in public Friday about their philosophies, their personal finances and even their religious activities.

The Idaho Judicial Council publicly interviewed two judges and two lawyers who have applied for the job vacated by the late 5th District Judge George Granata Jr.

The six-member council nominates applicants to Gov. Phil Batt, who ultimately makes the appointment. The council's recommendations to the governor will be available Monday.

The council, led by Chief Justice Linda Copple Trout, interviewed the candidates separately.

Larry Duff

Local Magistrate Larry Duff, 61, came before the council first.

Duff, who handles juvenile cases in the Mini-Cassia area, said he has helped establish programs to help both juveniles and their parents. He would work to provide rehabilitation programs and other services to the community should he be appointed to district judge, he said.

As a magistrate judge, Duff said he knows the importance of keeping cases moving swiftly through the system. But that same trait is also one of his weaknesses, he said. As a district judge, he would have to step back and allow more time for cases.

Duff mentioned criminal activity in part to the public's exposure to violence in the media, which does not always show how crime truly affects people's lives. Other reasons are a breakdown of the family, societal tolerance, and the infiltration of the drug and gang culture.

He said the solution to the problem is not to be found in the courtroom. Duff said he would be in favor of a justice system open to periodically provide judges with consecutive criminal cases.

Blind people teach other blind people how to take care of themselves

By Lorraine Cavener

RUPERT – When Viola Walker had her first child in 1954 at the age of 19 she went completely blind, and nobody knew why.

She felt helpless, not knowing if her baby was clean or if she was giving her child proper care.

The following year she had surgery for a detached retina and regained her sight. Seven years ago, when she realized she was going blind again, she did not want to feel helpless all

Man buried in sand cave dies in Arizona

PAGE, Ariz. (AP) — A Utah man who was buried for 20 minutes after a sand cave collapsed at Lake Powell has died in an Arizona hospital, the National Park Service said.

Michael Hindline, 28, of South Jordan was taken off life support Thursday at the Flagstaff Medical Center, in Flagstaff, where medical personnel determined the child has recovered from his injuries and can return to his family, according to an NPS news release issued Friday.

Hindline had been digging a tunnel to connect two large sand caves into a dune at the back end of Moki Canyon Monday night.

It took a group of Boy Scouts and several hunters an estimated 20 minutes to dig up Hindline.

Two firemen from Alpine, Calif., and a trauma nurse who happened to be camping in the area administered CPR while taking Hindline to Halls Crossing Marina, where he was transported by helicopter to the Flagstaff hospital.

over again. She called the Idaho Commission for the Blind and Visually Impaired.

The help she got changed her life, she said.

A home instructor from the commission began to visit Walker. After assessing her specific needs, Joanne Andersen, who also is legally blind, began to show Walker how to cook, clean and care for herself and her family.

Home instructors gear instruction to what the client needs and wants, said Brenda Knight, secretary at the commission's Twin Falls branch.

"If a man didn't clean his home when he was sighted, we wouldn't teach him to clean when he became blind," Knight said. Some clients have spouses, for example, who do the cleaning.

What Walker needed was help learning how to cope.

"(Andersen) taught me how to cook and use the oven and top of the stove without getting burned," Walker said. "She also taught me things like how to vacuum and make up the bed."

Walker learned to use tools as simple as rubber bands. "So many wraps around a can means peas or corn," Knight said.

She also learned to read Braille but seldom uses it.

Surgery has helped Walker to see better than she did a few years ago, but she is still considered legally blind. She still washes dishes the way Andersen showed her. When her husband, Raymond, is asleep, she doesn't turn the light on to work around the house.

"I break fewer dishes washing them in the dark, than I do with the lights on," Walker said.

Another thing she didn't do before getting help from the commission is to entertain, she said, as she sliced potatoes and washed chicken for that night's dinner.

"Before, I hated to cook, but now I have people over all the time for dinner," she said.

The things she learned from the commission helped Walker to feel better about herself, but Walker also credits her success to her church and her belief in God.

"The Lord has done a lot for my eyesight," she said.

Andersen is no longer the regional home instructor for the commission. Marianne Schmidt works with clients in the Mini-Cassia area on Tuesday and Thursday. Schmidt also covers Wendell, Gooding, Jerome, Bliss and Sun Valley, Knight said.

Home instructors, such as Schmidt, can do everything a sighted person can except drive so the commission hires drivers to transport them to their clients.

To qualify for services, an applicant must have a visual acuity of 20/200 in their best eye, even with corrective devices such as glasses or contact lenses.

Another criterion is a visual field of 20 degrees or less. Normal visual field is 180 degrees, Knight said. Either criteria can qualify a person, Knight said.

The Idaho Commission for the Blind, a federally funded agency, has been serving Idahoans since 1967. The commission says it helps individuals achieve independence, acquire education and work skills, find jobs and to become active members of society.

Before help from the commission, Walker was afraid to leave the house.

"My kids would say they were going to go get their poor old mom and take her to coffee," she said.

Now her children say they will take their mom to coffee – if they can find her.

"I'm gone all the time," she said.

Employees primp, prepare for big fair

By David Lee
Times-News writer

BURLEY – At a time when most people involved with the Cassia County Fair are sleeping or preparing items, Mike Wiggins is preparing the fairground itself.

He arrives at the fairgrounds at 4 a.m., relieving the security guard shift. Under a sky lit by stars and the moon, Wiggins begins making sure people come to a fairground that looks nothing like the mess left the previous night.

He empties out the dozen or so smaller trash cans that the city's dump trucks don't handle, picks up trash scattered by the wind overnight and scrubs all the toilets, bathrobms and building floors.

"I kind of like to get it done before it gets light," Wiggins said. "That way, when people come here it just looks good."

It is a slow and methodical process for Wiggins, who works until 1 p.m. But he enjoys the early hours when the air is still cool and the ground is still void of people.

"It's nicest when nobody's here. You know what to do and just do it and get stuff done," he said. "It's hard to get things done when people are around."

After emptying the trash and cleaning the bathrooms, Wiggins begins mopping the floors in the commercial and 4-H buildings. The process of wiping away dirty shoeprints and dried sticky liquids takes about 2 1/2 hours per building.

"They're not supposed to bring pops in here, but they do," he said. "It's kind of like housework times a hundred."

DAVID LEE/The Times-News

Mike Wiggins gets his mop and bucket ready to clean the 4-H building at the Cassia County Fairgrounds Friday as the morning light begins to rise.

Wiggins said he doesn't mind doing the dirty work, nor does he mind being the first one here, in least two hours before other maintenance people arrive.

"I'm the low man on the totem pole," he joked.

Wiggins' supervisor, Andy Anderson, said Wiggins wanted to be the early guy in.

"He liked that shift. He said it'd be better for him, that he could sleep better," Anderson said.

Wiggins has had to change his sleeping habits for the cleaning schedule. He goes to sleep at 8 p.m. – two hours earlier than normal – and gets up at 2:30 a.m. After downing a coffee and doughnut, it's time to get to work.

But don't think he isn't tempted by all the desserts made by 4-Hers, which sit tantalizingly on the tables as he mops the floor.

"This is the worst part. I love sweets," Wiggins said. "I just hope all that's for the sampling."

Anderson said without Wiggins' early morning efforts, the rest of the cleaning crew could not keep up with the daily crowd and what it leaves behind. At night, crew members race to get as much picked up as possible before Wiggins arrives, but there always seems to be plenty to do.

"He kind of like job security," Wiggins said. "As long as there's crowds, there'll be something for me to do."

Rottweilers attack calves on Oakley farm

The Times-News

OAKLEY – Two Rottweilers were spotted attacking two calves Wednesday, a Cassia County sheriff's report said.

When a boy on an Oakley farm was crossing his backyard he saw two Rottweilers chasing his family's Holstein calves. The dogs grabbed one of the calves by the back of the throat and dragged the calf in circles in the yard, the report said.

The boy picked up a board to chase the dogs. When the dogs came after him, he ran to the house, the report said. While he called his mother for help, the dogs grabbed and injured another calf.

The first calf got severe, large tears and bite marks around its neck and left rear leg, deputies reported. The second calf had several bites on the top and bottom of its neck and was bleeding from the lower part of its neck.

Witnesses recognized one of the dogs as belonging to a neighbor of the calves' owners. When one of the deputies spoke with the family member, the member said the dogs belonged to her son, who was at work, the report said.

A citation was written, and the animal control officer was asked to serve it on the dogs' owner.

The family owning the dogs was told by deputies to keep its dogs on its property. It also was told the dogs may have acquired a taste for blood, the report said.

Judges

cecent anonymous reviews by attorneys, one of his weaknesses apparently is not communicating his qualifications to the Idaho Bar Association.

Higer pointed to his experience as a former public defender and prosecutor, and his work on water rights issues. He said he has worked to initiate a mandatory program for divorcing parents who have children. The program advises them how to minimize damages to their children.

Higer noted that the Idaho Supreme Court agreed with his decision a few years ago that seizure of a driver's license during a drunken driving arrest does not amount to double jeopardy. The issue had been debated in courtrooms across the state.

Higer said he could help fight crime from the bench by handing down serious penalties.

He is not fond of withheld judgments, he said. Withheld judgements send offenders to recovery programs for six months followed by the chance for probation rather than prison.

"I think a withheld judgment sends the wrong message to defendants and the public in general, that we're going to allow that one bite of the apple," Higer said.

Monte Carlson

Twin Falls attorney Monte Carlson, 55, explained the mediation work he does in criminal cases, a practice unique to the 5th Judicial District. Acting under the authority of a judicial order, Carlson brings both parties together to review their cases. Separately, he tells them what he sees as the strengths and weaknesses of their cases.

None of the cases have been appealed, but Carlson said he expects one eventually will reach the Idaho Supreme Court.

Carlson wanted to alleviate any concerns about how he would be received as a judge, considering his deep involvement with the LDS Church. Carlson is a former president of the church's Twin Falls Stake and has led overseas missionaries.

"I really think there is acceptance by all religions of this devout Mormon," he said.

The Salvation Army, an evangelical organization, invited him to serve on its board of directors while he was an LDS bishop, he said. Twice he has been invited to be baccalaureate speaker at Twin Falls High School.

Carlson brought up his past tax trouble that stemmed from a period of missionary service in which he did not draw an income. He said the trouble arose because he made bad decisions. He has since had a perfect payment record, he said.

Raymundo Pena

Rupert attorney Raymundo Pena, 40, offered a defense against the unfavorable statements made by attorneys who anonymously evaluated his performance in recent surveys.

"My experience has been that if someone dislikes you, they are more than 10 times likely to respond," Pena said.

Pena said he thinks some lawyers might not speak favorably of him, because he is the first Hispanic attorney they have had to face. He is perceived as uppity, because he wants to win, he said, and he doesn't shy away from controversial cases.

"I'm not a member of the good old boys club. I don't know the rules. I don't want to be a member," Pena said.

If appointed, Pena said he would like to help reduce the Hispanic crime rate. He mentioned education as one way to fight the problem.

Pena said he thinks first-time offenders should have a chance at recovery before being sent to prison.

As a district judge, Pena said he would need to work on his ability to listen rather than acting as an advocate.

He has filed for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, stemming from his child's medical bills. He has a repayment plan, he said.

Judge finishes capital-case course

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS – District Judge Daniel Meehl completed a course that will help him handle death-penalty cases.

The National Judicial College course "Handling Capital Cases" discussed many capital-case topics including jury selection, sentencing and pronouncing the death penalty.

The course was designed to help judges meet the legal demands and judicial responsibilities unique to capital cases, a press release said.

Reents

Reents remembers when the Idaho Senate was equally divided among Democrats and Republicans in the early 1990s. She said the increasing Republican majority has hurt the Legislature, creating an "unhealthy situation" at the statehouse.

The minories of the 1991 and 1992 sessions are one reason she wanted to get back in the mix.

"The quality of debate and the quality of consideration of issues was probably the best in those two years," she said.

She said that if she didn't stand up as a Democrat, she shouldn't expect anyone else to.

"For the Democrats to come back," she said, "we'll have to do it by having good people."

But campaigning as a Democrat in Idaho isn't easy. So she tries to meet people one to one, at small events such as the coffee house chat. That gives her the chance to let people know her, not just her party.

"I don't have horns," she joked. "I don't have a big 'L' painted on my back."

For the 10 or so people who came out to drink coffee and learn about the candidate, Reents outlined her ideas.

Better business recruitment is key, she said, making sure new industry is economically and environmentally sound. Better education is needed too – at every level, from Head Start to adult ed.

These and other issues can be championed by the lieutenant governor, Reents said. The position's "bully pulpit" holds an opportunity Otter doesn't utilize, she said.

"We deserve better leadership," she said.

When Otter was outspoken recently, she said, his involvement may have been out of place. His support for the Sawtooth Farms Limited Liability Company's giant Owyhee County hog farm came too early, and perhaps too passionately.

"I'd like to know exactly what his role is," she told the editorial board.

Otter could not be reached Friday for comment.

Twin Falls residents Matt Smith and Marge Slotten quizzed Reents on her takes on the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory, drug prevention and higher education.

Education's piece of the pie doesn't look to be growing, Reents said, and state schools need to adapt to that in the future, a process that could prove beneficial.

"The question is," asked Slotten, a retired Idaho State University professor, "what kind of changes might work?"

Distance learning and better use of the Internet will help, Reents said. And the state needs to expand its system of community colleges – these are the schools that meet an area's needs.

Idaho needs to be "disconsolid of the federal government" when it comes to the DOE?, Reents said, and start helping children and families before problems begin.

But retired journalist and former Times-News reporter Bonnie Jones asked perhaps the most telling question. Does Reents think she would be able to work with Republican Sen. Dirk Kempthorne if he's elected governor?

The two are espousing similar issues in education and child immunization, and both have established themselves in Boise as "pro-business environmentalists," as Kempthorne once described himself.

Reents noted that Idaho's top two positions have been held by people in different parties for one-third of the state's history.

"I think Idaho has a tradition of the lieutenant governor and the governor working together," she said. "Even if they're not from the same party."

Chief

favor of disclosure, said Twin Falls attorney Monte Carlson, The Times-News' legal advisor.

Carlson Thursday sent information about the court cases to Moore, along with a letter requesting the release of applicants' names and resumes.

Moore the next afternoon called a closed conference to discuss Carlson's request with City Attorney Rob Williams, city administrator Jon Cecil, councilman Charles Correll and city clerk Kathy Miller.

After the meeting, Williams said he planned to review information about the cases and applicable state codes in hopes of having a recommendation for the council by Monday or Tuesday.

Although Idaho code appears to clearly say applicants' names are publicinnard, the issue of whether resumes are open to the press is more ambiguous, Carlson said.

Williams said releasing resumes might violate applicants' privacy rights, and could open the city to lawsuits.

Carlson and Williams said it is also unclear whether a police chief should be considered a public official, or a municipal employee.

If considered a rank-and-file city employee, the applicants would be afforded a much higher degree of privacy than an elected or appointed public official, Carlson said.

U.S. 30 speed limit drops in Hagerman

By Gina Mulder
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN – U.S. Highway 30 motorists will lose 10 mph when traveling through the town of Hagerman.

Idaho Transportation Department workers Wednesday hung new traffic signs along Hagerman's State Street, lowering the speed limit to 25 mph.

The change comes after City Council members in April decided the slower speeds would increase public safety on Hagerman's main thoroughfare.

After nearly four months of paperwork, public hearings and telephone conferences, the new speed limit is in effect and will be enforced, Hagerman Mayor James Norwood said.

A radar reader board on loan from Twin Falls city will stand on State Street for the next couple of days to help "educate folks" about the slower speed limit, Norwood said.

City officials in the past had petitioned ITD to lower the 35-mph speed limit on State Street, which doubles as U.S. 30, due to the increasing amount of pedestrian traffic. State Street is home to Hagerman's business district, the high school, city park, post office and churches.

ITD turned down all previous requests saying past ITD traffic studies did not indicate a speed-limit change was necessary. However, a change last year in a state statute gave local governments the authority to change the speed limit on state highways which run through town.

Glenns Ferry Planning and Zoning Commission proposes area of impact

By Laurie Black
Times-News correspondent

GLENNS FERRY – The Glenns Ferry Planning and Zoning Commission met Thursday evening to iron out details of its proposed area-of-impact ordinance.

Chairman Bob Jannusch said continued focus on water protection and quality make passage of the ordinance a major concern of the commission.

Proposed Glenns Ferry area of impact

How to comment ...

In person: 7 p.m. Sept. 9 at Glenns Ferry City Hall.

In writing: Through 5 p.m. Sept. 9; drop off comments at City Hall, or mail to P.O. Box 910, Glenns Ferry, ID 83623.

The ordinance would establish a geographical region of influence around the community which would allow the city government to review any plans for development presented to the Elmore County Planning and Zoning Commission.

The area of influence would include a stretch along both sides of Canyon Creek north of Glenns Ferry, which lies above the aquifer that serves as the sole source of the town's water supply.

A potato-processing plant in Glenns Ferry was the sole entity to comment on the proposal at the hearing.

Darwin Knapp, representative of Magic West Inc., read a statement outlining concerns that the ordinance may restrict the company's plans to apply wastewater from potato processing to fields above the aquifer.

"Magic West's current land-application operation is critical to present operations and expanded land application on other area lands determined to be environmentally suitable and is critical to long-term plant operations," Knapp said.

The facility asks that its wastewater be exempt under the ordinance because it already will be regulated by state and federal guidelines.

But after a brief discussion, the commission declared the request a "moot point" because the city's proposed ordinance will not be more restrictive than state regulations which supersede it.

The commission voted unanimously to pass a draft of the ordinance and will send its recommendation to the Glenns Ferry City Council for another hearing and final vote.

The council will hold a hearing on the proposal Sept. 9.

A. Nine.

There were those in ancient Greece who held a track meet as a funeral ceremony. In the Fifth Century B.C., that. Particularly, soldiers killed in war were so commemorated. With races mostly, some wrestling matches, too.

Q. Who invented the electric food mixer?

A. Credit Lillian Moller Gilbreth, 1878-1972, with that one, and another popular device: the trash can with the foot-lever lid lifter. You read about Mrs. Gilbreth in "Cheaper By The Dozen." She had 12 children and an enduring inclination to dream up labor-saving devices. She held a PhD, and with her husband Frank Gilbreth pioneered the first time-and-motion studies.

Cassia queen passes on crown

The Times-News

BURLEY – The last year has "been a blast" for 1998 Cassia County Rodeo Queen Chalet Haycock. But at the rodeo tonight, Haycock will pass on her crown.

Queen contestants began their week with the annual early-morning breakfast competition at Price's Cafe in Burley. As Chalet scurried about, dealing with last minute details and checking the program schedule, hopeful candidates filtered in wearing cowboy hats and sequins.

Haycock said, "I'm ready for this (breakfast) to be over and then I can enjoy the rest of the week."

Her fair duties included distributing awards, providing introductions and assisting during the queen competition.

Judges for the breakfast competition were Jane Tyler from Rupert, Sandra Munsee of Murtaugh and Misty Woodard from Woodland, Utah. Woodard drove four hours to arrive at the 8 a.m. event.

While the competitors appeared poised and confident, their mothers suffered "butterfly nerves."

"It's a mom's job to be nervous," said Marsha Nelson of

FOCUS ON PEOPLE

MVRS earns 3-year accreditation award

The Rehabilitation Accreditation Commission recently presented a three-year accreditation award to Magic Valley Rehabilitation Services. The award represents the highest level of accreditation achievable to an organization that helps people with disabilities obtain a level of independent living. The presentation is the ninth time in 25 years MVRS has received this recognition.

The Rehabilitation Accreditation Commission is a national accreditation organization headquartered in Tucson, Ariz., and an authority in the fields of rehabilitation and community and employment support services.

The award determination was made after a team of surveyors became part of the MVRS landscape. For nearly a week in April, representatives reviewed programs and interviewed staff and board members. Survey results came as no surprise to MVRS Board President Terry McNew.

"The standards that MVRS holds for itself as a viable force in this community are unbelievably high," he said.

McNew credits the MVRS staff, whose dedication and professionalism have sustained MVRS as a leader in Magic Valley's rehabilitation industry.

For 25 years, MVRS staff members have built the organization upon the precepts that all people can be productive members of their community.

The accreditation helps MVRS staff take a close look at its operation and how it might be improved. MVRS Executive Director Jeffrey Crumrine said the accreditation gives MVRS an opportunity to measure its services, programs and outcomes against national standards.

"The report confirms that MVRS is doing an excellent job," Crumrine said. "The community can be assured that MVRS is providing the types of programs that people with disabilities should have available to enhance training and employment opportunities."

Life is like box of birdies for Gump

The Associated Press

REDMOND, Wash. – Scott Gump lives just outside the gates of the famed Isleworth Country Club in Orlando where Mark O'Meara, Lee Janzen, and Tiger Woods, among others, play.

It's golf's high-rent district where O'Meara has his British Open and Masters trophies from this year and Janzen has his U.S. Open trophy.

Woods also has a replica trophy from the Masters he won two years ago.

Gump jumped into contention in the PGA Championship on Friday with a 1-under-par 69 and stands at 3-under 137 for 36 holes.

Scott Gump

He lives in nearby Windermere, Fla., and is what he calls "two drivers and a 3-wood" away from Isleworth.

"I'd like to bring the (Wanamaker) trophy home outside the gates," Gump said.

Gump fits the profile of the last nine out of 10 PGA Championship winners who were players seeking and capturing their first major victory.

Gump won two Nike Tour events and finished second three weeks ago in the Quad City Classic. He is trying to come out of nowhere to win the tournament like Jeff Sluman did in 1988. It's Gump's first major of the year.

Gump is an overachiever much like the mythical Forrest Gump, an Alabama running back played in the movies by Tom Hanks, who made famous the phrase "life is like a box of chocolates. You never know what you're going to get."

Gump was asked if he got the Forrest Gump routine very often.

"No. I don't run, first of all," he quipped.

A course like Sahalee Country Club with its narrow fairways is heaven for the straight-driving Gump, who is sixth on the PGA Tour in driving accuracy.

"I'm hitting fairways and greens, just doing my thing," Gump said. "I guess it can get kind of boring. It's the same old stuff for me."

Gump played collegiately at the University of Miami and reached the semifinals of the U.S. Amateur in 1987. It was a tournament eventually won by Billy Mayfair.

Gump said the pressure of a weekend in a major will be stern but he can think of at least one event that made him tighter.

"It was after I lost my tour (Nike) card and I had to qualify again," Gump said. "Now that's pressure. If I'm playing well, not much is going to bother me. If I'm playing poorly, I'm more frustrated from playing good or bad than I am where I am."

Gump said he can call on his experience at Quad City to help.

"Finishing second in Moline is really going to give me a lot of confidence," he said. "That was fun for me. I missed by one shot. Steve Jones beat me. And we were doing the whole press thing."

The PGA Championship is like a box of chocolates. You never know what kind of winner you're going to get.

Scott hopes it goes to a Gump.

Singh ties course record

The Associated Press

REDMOND, Wash. – The second round of the PGA Championship turned into a second chance for Vijay Singh and Colin Montgomerie.

Both of them know the pain of coming close to winning their first major. By keeping it straight and simple at Sahalee Country Club, both of them got into contention once again Friday.

Singh made five birdies on the first nine holes and matched the course record that Tiger Woods set the day before, a 4-under-par 66 that put him at 136 going into the weekend.

"Each year you play, you gain a little more experience, a lot more knowhow to handle a situation like I'm in now," said Singh, who came up two strokes short of a playoff in the 1992 PGA Championship.

Right behind him was Montgomerie, in pursuit of his first major championship and in contention for the first time since he lost by one stroke to Ernie Els in the U.S. Open last year.

He made three keep-par saves in a round of 67 that put him at 137, along with Scott Gump and Steve Stricker.

"It doesn't come over here to finish second," said Montgomerie, who has done just that in three previous majors. "The hardest thing to do is get into contention. We'll go from there."

The high, heavenly ground of Sahalee was full of high hopes for a couple of players chasing history.

Davis Love III is trying to become the only repeat winner since the PGA went to stroke play in 1958 and the first since Denny Shure in 1937. He worked his way into the hunt with a 2-under 68.

That left him just two strokes back at 138, along with Woods, Brad Faxon, Andrew Magee and former PGA champion Steve Elkington.

And never count out Mark O'Meara, undaunted by the pressure of trying to become the first player since Ben Hogan in 1953 to win three majors in one season.

Just like he did in winning the Masters and the British Open, the 41-year-old O'Meara just plugged along until making a thrilling move that thrust him to 3-under, one off the lead.

O'Meara threaded the "goal post" trees guarding the par-5 11th green with a 3-iron, then holed a 15-footer from just on the fringe for eagle that drew him within one stroke of the lead.

He dropped back with bogeys at the 12th and 15th holes and finished with a 70 for 139, just three strokes back but in good shape for the weekend. O'Meara

Kitna will start tonight for Seahawks

The Associated Press

More NFL – B9

CHENEY, Wash. – The quarterback of the future will start for the Seattle Seahawks in tonight's preseason game against San Francisco, while Warren Moon – the quarterback of the present – rides the bench.

Determined for Kitna will get his second consecutive start when the Seahawks play in the American Bowl game at Vancouver, British Columbia.

The 40-year-old Moon, who ended a lengthy contract holdout Wednesday and was immediately anointed the regular-season starter, will not play, coach Dennis Erickson said.

Kitna, whose remarkable string of preseason performances earned him a place on the roster last season, said his goal was to play well against the 49ers' first team.

"This is one of the elite teams year in and year out," Kitna said of the 49ers. "Today is another test I have to go through. I want to show what I am doing is not a fluke."

The first contract holdout of Moon's 20-year pro career allowed Kitna and John Friesz more than three weeks of training camp work with Seattle's first team. Friesz will play the second half of tonight's game, which starts at 6 p.m.

Kitna started in last weekend's victory over Indianapolis, completing 9 of 13 passes for 92 yards and a touchdown.

Kitna was an undrafted free agent out of Central Washington last year and is earning the league minimum of $216,000.

The forgotten season: White Sox pound Mariners

The Associated Press

CHICAGO – Frank Thomas homered to tie a team record with 10 in a row in the first inning and Mike Sirotka pitched 7 1-3 strong innings Friday night as the Chicago White Sox routed the Seattle Mariners 14-2.

Albert Belle drove in four runs and Thomas had three RBIs for the White Sox, whose nine-run outburst matched their biggest of the season. Chicago has won seven of its last 10.

Seattle's Ken Griffey Jr. went 3-for-4, but remained stuck on 41 homers. He hasn't homered since July 31, a stretch of 54 at-bats.

Sirotka (12-10) won for the fourth time in his last five starts, retiring 12 straight before Rich Amaral hit a one-out single in the eighth.

Alex Rodriguez and Griffey followed with singles to lead the bases and Edgar Martinez walked to make it 12-2 and finish Sirotka, who allowed eight hits with two walks and five strikeouts.

Chicago sent 12 men to the plate in the sixth.

Mike Caruso led off with a single, Thomas doubled and Belle followed with a two-run double to the left-field fence. Greg Norton singled and Belle scored on Alex Rodriguez's error for a 5-1 lead.

Ken Cloude (7-8) hit Mike Cameron with a pitch to load the bases before Robert Machado greeted reliever Bob Wells with a two-run bloop single that a diving Jay Buhner couldn't reach.

Ray Durham followed with an RBI single, Caruso had a fielder's choice RBI grounder and Thomas hit a towering two-run shot to left for his 20th homer of the season.

Robin Ventura led off the bottom of the seventh with his 14th homer to make it 12-1.

Durham's double, a sacrifice bunt by Caruso and Thomas' sacrifice fly put the White Sox ahead 2-1 in the bottom of the third. Caruso singled, stole second and scored on Belle's two-out double in the first for a 1-0 lead. The Mariners tied in the third when Griffey singled, stole second and scored on Martinez's single.

Ohio State All-American linebacker Andy Katzenmoyer, center, answers questions as he is surrounded by reporters during team picture day Friday.

Buckeyes could lose Butkus Award winner

3 starters face ineligibility for poor grades

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) – Three of Ohio State's top players – including Lombardi and Butkus Award winner Andy Katzenmoyer – have yet to meet academic requirements and could be ineligible this season.

"It's a main concern for whoever's a sports fan or a Buckeye fan, but I'm going to take care of business and be out there Sept. 5," Katzenmoyer said.

He must meet a 2.0 grade-point average by passing summer classes in music, golf and AIDS awareness.

Katzenmoyer, a first-team All-American linebacker, All-Big Ten safety Damon Moore and second-team all-conference offensive guard Rob Murphy probably will miss some of Ohio State's workouts for its Sept. 5 opener at West Virginia.

"I'm obviously not happy about it," Ohio State coach John Cooper said Friday. "I'm not happy whenever we have some players who miss practice."

If the three, all sociology majors, are unable to play, it be a blow to a Buckeye team that returns almost all its starters from last year's 10-3 squad and figures to be one of the best this season.

"It's just a matter of we're three All-Americans from one team and we're all in academic trouble," Katzenmoyer said. "It's just gotten the spotlight."

Ohio State is touting Katzenmoyer as a Heisman Trophy candidate. Moore, who had to pass a summer course in Swahili to be eligible a year ago, is among the best in the nation at his position. Murphy is the most experienced lineman for the Buckeyes.

"I had a lot of personal problems in the winter and spring that caused my grades to go down," Katzenmoyer said. "I screwed up in the winter and spring, so now I've got to put my time in."

Katzenmoyer, a 6-foot-4, 255-pound junior, pleaded no contest in March to a drunken-driving charge after he was cited for speeding and had a blood-alcohol level of 0.133 percent. The legal limit in Ohio is 0.10 percent and the legal drinking age is 21; Katzenmoyer is 20.

He ended up serving three days in an alcohol-counseling program, had his driver's license suspended for 180 days and paid a fine of $300.

Moore, the team's leading tackler two years ago, said he wasn't concerned about being ineligible.

"We're all going to be all right," the senior free safety said. "I don't understand why people are making a fuss now. If we're not here Sept. 5, you all can get a free shot at all of us as much as you want. It's not a big deal. Everybody's going to make it."

Murphy, a 6-5, 300-pound junior, isn't worried about his grades.

"I'm going to be fine, absolutely fine," he said. "I'm doing the work in the classroom, I've talked to the teachers and they know I'm putting in the effort."

Katzenmoyer, who said he is growing tired of the spotlight, intends to use his latest problem as incentive.

"I think I react better when people doubt me," he said.

Gone with the wind: Pars disappear at British Open

LYTHAM ST. ANNES, England (AP) – The wind off the Irish Sea has made for two unforgiving rounds of golf at the Women's British Open. And lost in the mists was par.

It was simply nowhere in sight. Brandie Burton came closest Friday, with a 2-over 74 for a one-stroke lead halfway through the tournament.

"I knew that something like this was going to happen on a golf course like this," Burton said. "And in these windy conditions and you've got to just roll with the punches."

Burton rolled, and threw few punches of her own at the Lytham St. Annes links course. She was on top at 1-over 145, with American compatriot Leslie Spalding a stroke behind. Three players were another shot back.

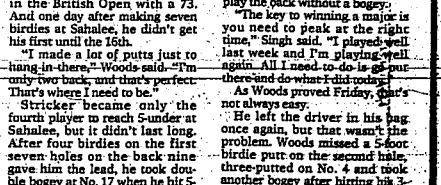

The high scores were reminiscent of the U.S. Women's Open in July, when regulation play ended with eventual champion Se Ri Pak and Jenny Chausiriporn tied at 6-over 290.

The big numbers also recalled a typical round of a men's British Open, where drizzle, cold and demanding links courses unhinge the best of golfers.

"I managed to really keep my head which is really important on this golf course."

It was as if Burton were playing an entirely different game from the one two weeks ago at the Du Maurier Classic in Canada. She won the year's final major at 18-under.

Women's British Open Scores

Singh

was five back midway through the Masters, and three back after two rounds at Royal Birkdale.

"It's unflappable," said Love, paired with O'Meara the first two days. "The crowd was yelling to him, 'Make it three!' He wouldn't let the crowd bother him."

Woods couldn't hold a first-round lead for the second straight major. He followed a 65 in the British Open with a 73. And one day after making seven birdies at Sahalee, he didn't get his first until the 16th.

"I made a lot of putts just to hang in there," Woods said. "I'm only two back, and that's perfect. That's where I need to be."

Stricker became only the fourth player to reach 5-under at Sahalee, but it didn't last long. After four birdies on the first seven holes on the back nine gave him the lead, he took double bogey at No. 17 when he hit 5-iron into the water.

"It was an up-and-down day, but the course will do that," Stricker said.

Indeed, a tight, tree-lined Sahalee made for a wide-open weekend – 13 players are within three shots of Singh. Only three of the 20 players who broke par in the first round managed to shoot in the 60s on Friday – Stricker, Gump and Elkington.

And of the the 14 players under par, only David Frost managed to play the back without a bogey.

"The key to winning a major is you need to peak at the right time," Singh said. "I played well last week and I'm playing well again. All I need to do is go out there and do what I did today."

As Woods proved Friday, that's not always easy.

He left the driver in his bag once again, but that wasn't the problem. Woods missed a 5-foot birdie putt on the second hole, three-putted on No. 4 and took another bogey after hitting his 3-wood into the rough on the 480-yard, par-4 sixth.

Koy Detmer guides Eagles past Steelers

Detroit running back Barry Sanders begins a 39-yard carry past Atlanta Falcon Juran Bolden, right, during the first quarter of their preseason game Friday in Pontiac, Mich.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) – Third-team quarterback Koy Detmer revived Philadelphia's offense after the Pittsburgh Steelers' defensive starters dominated it, throwing three second-half touchdown passes as the Eagles rallied for a 21-17 exhibition victory Friday night.

The Steelers led 17-0 in the third quarter before Detmer hit Karl Hankton for two touchdown passes and Antwuan Wyatt for another.

Detmer, who followed starter Bubby Hoying as Eagles coach Ray Rhodes bypassed second-teamer Rodney Peete, won it by finding Hankton for a 20-yard completion on a second-and-15 play with 10 seconds remaining.

Detmer, who finished 15-of-27 for 217 yards, had earlier hit Wyatt and Hankton on a pair of 7-yard scoring passes. Both of Hankton's touchdowns came in the fourth quarter.

Before Detmer took over, Pittsburgh's defensive starters sat only shut down the Eagles' offense but outscored it as Chris Oldham scored on a 64-yard interception return on Philadelphia's third play from scrimmage.

It was a workmanlike effort for the Steelers' regulars, who outgained the Eagles 169-43 and outrushed them 76-14 while taking a 10-0 halftime lead, but another woeful one for the Eagles – at least until Detmer took the field.

NFL

Kordell Stewart played a quarter and a half for the Steelers, hitting on 9 of 13 passes for 73 yards, and Jerome Bettis played less than that before leaving with seven carries for 27 yards.

Rhodes took an unusual stance for the preseason by saying it was almost mandatory for his team to win after last week's desultory 26-14 loss to the New York Jets in which the Eagles fell behind 20-3.

Panthers 12, Bills 7

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. – Carolina's John Kasay connected on all four of his field goal attempts, but quarterback Kerry Collins may have suffered a broken nose in the victory.

Kasay connected on field goals of 20, 37, 46 and 49 yards and improved to 9-for-9 overall for the Panthers (2-0).

Collins, Carolina's fourth-year quarterback, was 12-of-23 for 138 yards before leaving the game with an apparent broken nose just before halftime. Collins, who suffered a broken jaw last preseason, will have X-rays Saturday in Charlotte.

Rob Johnson was 6-of-11 for 122 yards and added 27 yards on four rushes for Buffalo (0-2).

Falcons 7, Lions 3

PONTIAC, Mich. – Steve DeBerg's comeback got off to a shaky start, but a 29-yard touchdown pass by Chris Chandler turned out to be enough for Atlanta (1-1).

DeBerg, 44, a 17-year NFL veteran making his first appearance since 1993, entered the game with 9:50 left in the second quarter and was unable to get a sustained drive going. He was sacked three times and was 6-of-11 passing for 39 yards.

Terance Mathis had four catches for 74 yards for the Falcons, including the lone touchdown in the second quarter. Chandler was 4-for-5 for 74 yards.

Jaguars 24, Giants 10

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) – Fourth-round draft pick Tavian Banks turned a broken play into a 59-yard touchdown run Friday to help the Jacksonville Jaguars to a 24-10 exhibition victory over the New York Giants.

James Stewart rushed for 70 yards on nine first-quarter carries for Jacksonville (1-1) to widen his lead in the race for the starting running back spot vacated when free agent Natrone Means signed with the San Diego Chargers.

Stewart's main competition appeared to be Fred Taylor, the ninth overall draft pick out of Florida.

5 Cardinals hit homers, but McGwire not among them

ST. LOUIS (AP) – Five Cardinals not named Mark McGwire homered as St. Louis ended the Pittsburgh Pirates' four-game winning streak with a 10-5 victory Friday night.

Ray Lankford, who leads the team with 18 home runs since the All-Star break – one more than McGwire – hit his 22nd and Tom Lampkin hit his sixth for the Cardinals. Both were three-run shots.

Delino DeShields, Brian Jordan and Fernando Tatis added solo shots as the Cardinals had their second five-homer game this season. Meanwhile, McGwire barely got to swing his bat.

National League

Cubs 6, Astros 4

HOUSTON – Sammy Sosa hit a tiebreaking RBI double and pitcher Mark Clark's capped the four-run sixth inning with a two-run single as the Chicago Cubs beat Houston 6-4 Friday night, snapping the Astros' seven-game winning streak.

Clark (7-11) allowed four runs and seven hits in 7 2-3 innings. He struck out eight and didn't walk a batter.

Reds 3, Expos 2

CINCINNATI – Roberto Petagine's hit won the game, but Vladimir Guerrero's upper-deck homer and cross-field throw drew the raves.

Petagine's pinch-hit single with two outs in the bottom of the ninth gave Cincinnati a 3-2 victory Friday night over the Montreal Expos, ending the Reds' four-game losing streak.

Phillies 6, Rockies 2

DENVER (AP) – Doug Glanville hit a two-run homer and Carlton Loewer pitched 6 1-3 strong innings as Philadelphia ended Colorado's season-high four-game winning streak, 6-2 Friday night.

Scott Rolen broke out of an 0-for-13 slump with a double for the Phillies, who had lost 11 of their previous 14 games.

Cleveland's Hoiles hits 2 grand slams

CLEVELAND (AP) – Chris Hoiles became the ninth major leaguer and first catcher to hit two grand slams in a game Friday night, leading the Baltimore Orioles to an 11-3 rout of the Cleveland Indians.

Hoiles hit his seventh career grand slam in the third off Charles Nagy (10-8), who yielded 11 of Baltimore's runs. With two outs in the eighth against left-hander Ron Villone, Hoiles hit a 416-foot shot to left on a 3-2 pitch that sailed inside the foul pole to tie the record.

Robin Ventura of the Chicago White Sox was the last player to hit two grand slams, on Sept. 4, 1995 against Texas. Hoiles is the third Orioles player to do it, joining Jim Gentile and Frank Robinson.

Eric Davis led off Baltimore's five-run third with a single to extend his hitting streak to 29 games, longest in the majors this season.

Tigers 13, Athletics 4

DETROIT – Damion Easley hit his first career grand slam to help the Detroit Tigers snap a nine-game losing streak.

Justin Thompson (10-9) pitched six innings, allowing four runs (one earned) and four hits, walking three and striking out seven. A.J. Sager pitched three innings for his first save.

Blake Stein (4-7) dropped to 0-2 in his last five starts, allowing six runs on six hits in four innings.

American League

Yankees 6, Rangers 4

NEW YORK – Bernie Williams and Chuck Knoblauch hit solo homers as New York extended its latest winning streak to nine and knocked Texas out of first place in the AL West.

Andy Pettitte (14-6) won for the eighth time in his last nine decisions, and the Yankees (89-29) improved to 60 games over .500, one short of the team record set in 1939, when the Yankees finished 106-45.

Angels 7, Blue Jays 5

TORONTO – Tim Salmon drove in two runs as the Anaheim Angels beat the Toronto Blue Jays for the first time this season.

The Angels ended the Blue Jays five-game winning streak and improved to 1-5 vs. Toronto this season.

Craig Shipley went 3-for-4 for the Angels, who have won five of their last six.

Salmon hit a sacrifice fly in the first, and his RBI double in the fourth gave the Angels a 6-2 lead.

Red Sox 13, Twins 12

BOSTON – Rookie Donnie Sadler hit a two-run single in the seventh inning as Boston held off Minnesota in a wild game.

The two teams combined for 32 hits and every starter got at least one hit.

Trailing by two runs, the Twins loaded the bases with one out in the ninth off Tom Gordon, who gave up an RBI groundout to Marty Cordova before getting Ron Coomer on a grounder to third for his 34th save.

Royals 11, Devil Rays 9

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Johnny Damon homered and tripled, and Dean Palmer drove in four runs as Kansas City beat Tampa Bay.

Jose Offerman, who has hit safely in 32 of his last 33 games, had three singles as the Royals beat the Devil Rays for the fifth time in six tries.

Irvan wins pole at Michigan; Gordon will start in Row 2

Ernie Irvan

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) – Ernie Irvan took advantage of a slightly cooler track near the end of a 46-car qualifying session for the Pepsi 400 to win his first-ever pole at Michigan Speedway on Friday.

Starting beside him Sunday – also in a Pontiac – will be Bobby Labonte, whose speed held up until Irvan went 183.416 mph for his second pole this season.

Jeff Gordon, the current Winston Cup points leader who holds the track qualifying record of 186.611 mph, will start on the inside of Row 2 after a run of 183.341 mph.

It was the 21st career pole for Irvan, who was almost killed at Michigan in an Aug. 20, 1994, crash. He was also fastest in practice, before qualifying began.

"The run was a lot like I did in practice and it's really hard to duplicate something like that," said Irvan, who won the June race at Michigan in 1997. "It's an awesome facility and I love coming here. When they throw the green flag Sunday, it's going to be a great race."

The luck of the draw forced Gordon, who has never won at Michigan, to take his Chevrolet out first, while the sun was shining and the 2-mile banked oval was fast. Cloud cover later in the session made the track quicker for Irvan.

"It pushed a little more than I thought it would," said Gordon, who could tie a modern-era NASCAR record by winning his fourth consecutive race this weekend. "We ran close to that in practice and hoped for a little more. It's important to start up front here."

In 28 of the 29 Winston Cup races at Michigan, the winner has started from the pole, most recently Labonte in the August race of 1995.

Thirty minutes into qualifying, Labonte, the 24th car out, bumped Gordon off the pole with a lap of 183.574 mph, driving down low, his wheels almost on the apron at the finish.

"It was awful close," Labonte said. "This little car has run real good the last month. The sun was out and the track was slicker. There's a couple guys I figure would probably beat us."

Dale Jarrett got some cloud cover just as he wheeled out onto the track to start his run. It seemed to make a difference as his Ford turned in 183.132 mph, fourth-fastest lap of the day.

Union boss: Salary cap is off limits in negotiations

LOS ANGELES (AP) – The executive director of the NBA Players Association said Friday he can promise owners the union will resolve the marijuana issue, but it won't stand for a hard salary cap.

"The players are strongly united in their opposition to the elimination of a soft cap," Billy Hunter said after a three-hour union meeting at an airport hotel. "That's not negotiable.

"We're prepared to work out some kind of compromise as long as it doesn't involve a hard cap. That's the main issue. There are other solutions to their problems. There are no teams in the red, the issue is guaranteed profits."

Hunter said if the salary cap issue can be resolved, he believes everything else will fall into place.

"We're prepared to reach an accord and address their concerns on our current (drug) policy. We'll resolve that one," Hunter said. "I can promise them we will resolve the marijuana issue."

Marijuana has not been on the NBA list of banned substances.

About 30 players, including Stacy Augmon, Brent Barry, Jud Buechler, Michael Cage, Elden Campbell, Chris Dudley, Rick Fox, Adam Keefe, rookie Michael Olowokandi and Lorenzen Wright attended the session. Another regional meeting is planned Monday in Dallas.

Those interviewed backed Hunter on the salary cap issue.

"We're not going to bend on that," said Wright, the Los Angeles Clippers player representative. "It's the only way we can make money. We're going to stand firm. Everybody's on the same page.

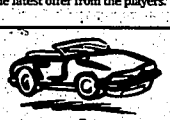

"Before the season starts (in early November), I think it will be settled. I hope it will."

Said Augmon: "You have situations like with Michael Jordan, you want to pay him $30 million. If there's a hard cap, there won't be money for anyone else."

The meeting, for the purpose of keeping the players informed, came a day after the union withdrew its unfair labor complaint before the National Labor Relations Board.

The withdrawal came shortly before the board's regional director was to issue his recommendation on the union's contention that owners illegally imposed a lockout before bargaining to an impasse as required by federal law.

The union's about-face came exactly one week after commissioner David Stern, deputy commissioner Russ Granik and six owners abruptly walked out of a negotiating session after receiving the latest offer from the players.

Revitalizing churches requires some risk

FAITH TODAY
Clark Morphew

I can think of one 5-mile urban radius where there are only two congregations that could seriously claim to be growing and creating any kind of excitement in their neighborhoods. One is Jewish; the other, Christian.

All the other congregations (all of them Christian) in that area seem either stagnant or in the process of dying. Probably none of these congregations will change enough to eventually prosper because they simply don't sincerely care if their ministry will be there far in the future.

Longtime members of these congregations do want their ministry to be intact when they die. They want to be buried from the building that has required so much sacrifice and devotion from them over the years. Members believe a decent burial is their God-given right, and they will continue to keep the church in usable shape until they breathe their last.

But it is very difficult to see into the future with any kind of clarity when you are within five or 10 years of meeting the Grim Reaper. What those senior members want is a congregation offering a peaceful — that is, traditional — worship experience, an atmosphere of hope and good will, a pastor who cares about the parishioners, and some assurance that things will not change drastically in the near future. And they are convinced that the congregation will still be there in the future, if only the pastor and members do their jobs.

But that is not always true. Congregations are dying all over the place. Church buildings, which often have limited alternate uses, are being sold for a song. Parish pastors are begging their people to take hold of a mission, any mission, and get the congregation rolling back to health.

So, if your congregation is withering on the vine, here are some possible ways to bring some life and mission to the entire vineyard:

First, your location may be the biggest problem you face.

At times, too many churches were built to serve a small neighborhood. In such cases, denominational officials hoped the congregation would serve 500 to 1,000 people, stop growing at some point and then be replenished by new members who would revive the church through the generations.

But the truth is, some of those neighborhoods are changing, and the new owners or renters are not that interested in becoming the catalyst for a congregation on the mend. Rather, they are looking for a church that has everything: great preaching and worship, endless programs geared for the family and any number of helpful programs for the seeking adult.

If your congregation is hidden in an established neighborhood, the church leaders must take a long look at relocating. Some church observers believe that 75 percent of all churches in the United States should relocate. Congregations that cannot afford to relocate may be able to build a bell tower that would make their congregation more visible or expand the building to make new programming a possibility.

Secondly, the congregation has a problem with debt.

No, the debt is probably not too high. It is, more than likely, too low. Very often, stagnant congregations don't have any debt. There is no wolf at the door, no threat to future existence. With no debt, the entire congregation can sit back and rest on its accomplishments.

So, a new debt at church creates a huge problem because most parishioners have spent their lives getting out of debt. Their homes no longer belong to the bank. The car is paid off. The small improvements to their home made just before retirement are now a thing of the past. They are finally debt-free. They will resist incurring debt at church with every fiber of their beings.

The third possible solution is to shock the community with an event that will draw people from the region in anticipation of a new experience.

If you really want to create interest, make the new experience a drawing for a new automobile. Of course, every member will have to hit the bricks and sell tickets door to door. At the event, have some ice cream cones to sell and some items that were made by members of the congregation.

Here's the secret. In rejuvenating a congregation, there are no failures. Every attempt is merely an experiment. If it works, wrap it up and use it next year. If it doesn't fly, move on to the next possible solution.

Doing whatever it takes

Teens return from demanding mission voyage

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS – To be willing to die for the people in Central America ...

A Twin Falls teen-ager decided she would be willing. She would do whatever God wanted her to do.

Then she embarked on a mission trip that led her into the villages of El Salvador, where many people had never heard the Gospel.

Stephanie Wallin, the 16-year-old daughter of David and Suzie Hawkins, said, "I applied for the opportunity to go to El Salvador because I want to be a full-time missionary with my life ... we were told we had to be willing to die for these people, because we would be taken to places that were not safe."

Stephanie went to El Salvador on another mission last year. She loves the people there, she said. She was more than willing to return.

She explained, "Wherever I went, I used the Scripture in Jeremiah 29:11, where God says, 'For I know the plans I have for you, declares the Lord. Plans to prosper you and not to harm you, plans to give you a hope and a future.' "

Dawn Johnson, from Twin Falls, also went on the month-long mission trip to El Salvador this year.

Upon her return, she said, "I would definitely go again. It was so hard to come home, because my heart goes out to those people who don't know Jesus."

This 19-year old is the daughter of Jon and Lisa Johnson of Chubbuck.

The two Magic Valley girls, both members of the Twin Falls First Assembly of God Church, were among a group of 24 students from throughout the United States, part of a team called "World Warriors." The mission trip was organized by the Assembly of God Ambassadors In Mission. In Central America, the students worked with Assembly of God missionary Don Triplett and a group of local Christians. They left Twin Falls June 21 and returned July 23.

Dawn Johnson, left, with children in El Salvador, said she found it hard to come home because she became so attached to the people there.

Upon arriving in El Salvador, mission group members were given strenuous training to equip them for the potentially hazardous adventures they were to encounter as they traveled to distant villages. The students were led into a sewer line, where they had to crawl for long distances in complete darkness, not knowing what was ahead or how long they had to go before coming to the end of the line.

"They had us do this so we would learn we need to listen to the voice of God and to build trust in our leaders and do what we were told for our own good," Stephanie said. "Another thing we did in our training – to help us get along with each other and to learn we are all perfect creatures made by God – we each got a partner and went to a mud hole and covered our entire bodies with mud. Then we walked down to a lake and rinsed off the mud to find a perfect creature under all that dirt."

The girls in the mission group were long skirts and T-shirts, as shorts were not considered acceptable among the locals.

"We only had two of each," Stephanie said, "one to wear and one to wash."

The students were divided into two groups and rode horseback to different villages, where they distributed clothing, presented dramas, sang hymns and "smiled a lot."

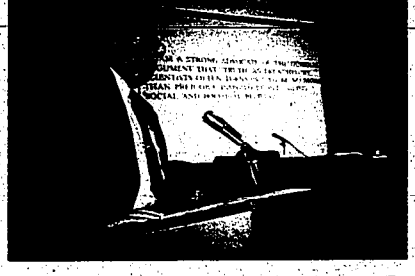

Stephanie said, "We used the drama and songs to draw a crowd; then we could present the Gospel and pray for healings. We saw one little boy who had been crippled from birth begin to walk. A lot of them found salvation. Even though we couldn't understand too much of their Spanish, we could tell by their eyes."

Teams from nearby churches will continue the ministries begun by the American missionaries.

Dawn Johnson told about the group taking a 20-hour trip from El Salvador to Nicaragua, where they ventured to distant villages carrying a nine-day supply of necessities on their backs. In Managua, capital city of Nicaragua, the missionaries conducted a worship service in a church.

"Toward the end of the service, we

The Rev. Paul Norwalt speaks at a 1995 Merrimack School Board meeting in support of teaching creationism in the town's public schools in Merrimack, N.H. For years, Norwalt has tested the line between church and state, most recently by running an unregistered school at his Merrimack Baptist Temple.

Testing the line between church, state: Leader faces jail for ignoring court order

The Associated Press

MERRIMACK, N.H. — For the Rev. Paul Norwalt, law comes from the Bible, not the Legislature. This is evident even outside his church.

Posted at every entrance to his Merrimack Baptist Temple are these words: "You have entered property which is an embassy of the Kingdom of the Lord. Be advised and noticed that you are now subject to the law of the Kingdom and jurisdiction of the word of God."

For years, Norwalt has tested the line between church and state, most recently by running an unregistered school at the church. Now he is on a collision course with authorities over where that line is drawn.

In May, Norwalt was ordered to get state approval for his school or close it. He has done neither. A judge last week found Norwalt in contempt of court for defying the order.

If auditors come to the pastor's church for the start of the school year in September, Norwalt could be fined and sent to jail.

Though Norwalt, 53, is an outspoken advocate for the religious right in this town of 23,000, he doesn't seek publicity.

His followers won't open the church door for strangers, despite signs that welcome "Christian fellowship." Neither Norwalt nor his church accepts mail. As a result, neighbors are concerned that something more than Christian values motivates the group.

"It is a masquerade, and I'm scared to death what's going to happen when that mask finally comes down," said Chuck Mower, a former school board member who often clashed with Norwalt.

Norwalt incorporated the church in 1984 as a religious, not-for-profit organization. It operated quietly for more than a decade. But in January 1995, the pastor petitioned the school board to bolster the curriculum with creation-

Study: Older religious believers report lower blood pressure

The Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — Going to church and reading the Bible regularly may do more than save your soul — they may extend your life.

In one of the biggest studies of its kind, Duke University researchers found that people 65 or over who faithfully participated in religious activities were 40 percent less likely to have high blood pressure.

In particular, people who attend church weekly and read the Bible or pray regularly had lower diastolic pressure than those who are less religious, the study found. High diastolic readings are associated with heart attacks and strokes.

While the study doesn't prove a causal relationship between belief in a higher power and good health, it does provide numeric evidence of another benefit of religious activity, study co-author Dr. Harold Koenig said.

Numerous studies have shown that religious people are less depressed, have healthier immune systems and deal better with addictions than the nonreligious.

In a study released in this month's issue of the International Journal of Psychiatry in Medicine, researchers took the blood pressures of nearly 4,000 North Carolinians between 1986 and 1994. Researchers found that older residents who attended religious services at least once per week had consistently lower diastolic readings, as did those who read the Bible or prayed regularly.

The average diastolic reading was about 78 millimeters of mercury for people who attended church regularly and prayed frequently or read the Bible daily, compared with nearly 81 millimeters for those who didn't.

Religion may provide the faithful with comfort or a loving community in their golden years, thereby lowering stress and blood pressure, Koenig said.

ism, the belief that God created all life and matter. He withdrew the petition after weeks of heated debate.

In March 1995, he dissolved his church's corporation, severing its ties to the state.

"We being moral and godly children, we can't let our children be a part of that, to be trained by the godless," Norwalt said during one interview.

Like his church, little is known about Norwalt's school. It offers, he said, a self-paced curriculum of character development, memorization of Bible verses and creationism. And the lessons are not just for children.

"All of the adults in the church go to school here," Norwalt said.

From the start, the pastor refused to register his school with the state. State officials warn that the children could be found truant for the time spent at Norwalt's school, and their parents could face fines of $1,000.

Norwalt was also evicted from his home for refusing to pay the education portion of his property taxes. Littered with ungrammatical Latin and references to God's law, Norwalt's briefs call judges "alien enemy/agents" of an illegal government with no authority over a man of God.

heard a gang fighting outside," Dawn said. "There were gangs everywhere. The area the church was in was the territory of a gang called Dead Eaters. The only way you could become a member of that gang was to eat a dead person. We quickly got into our two buses and started driving through where they were fighting. Suddenly we heard gunshots and our Nicaraguan guide shouted to us to hit the floor. We made it out safely, thanks to God."

Encountering danger wasn't uncommon.

Stephanie explained, "Once I reached out to pull open a door and there was a tarantula. I froze. Then I went and hid from it."

At times, Stephanie said, the students got hungry, because they had only rations.

"The villagers did give us some food, but we sometimes didn't know what we were eating," she recalled. "One time we had tamales made with monkey meat. It tasted like the dark meat of a chicken."

Children in the villages often approached the students, hanging onto them and holding their hands.

"A lot of the children only wore dirty and ragged underwear," Dawn said. "Some of the younger ones were naked. Dirt was caked under their fingernails and between their toes. Some of the girls played a game with a rock. I couldn't do it at first, but it was so good to get dirty with them. I just love them so much. I wanted God to use me ..."

Dawn quoted I Timothy 1:15-16: "It is a trustworthy statement, deserving full acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, among whom I am foremost of all. And yet for this reason I found mercy, in order that in me as the foremost, Jesus Christ might demonstrate his perfect patience, as an example for those who would believe in him for eternal life."

Ministers pledge fight against homosexuality

WASHINGTON (AP) — Religious leaders faced off against gay activists Wednesday and declared it is time for clergy to act decisively to oppose homosexuality.

Religious people must "draw a line in the sand," said Rabbi Yehuda Levin of New York, a member of the Union of Orthodox Rabbis of U.S. and Canada.

"Homosexuality is a sin," said the Rev. Jerome McFarland, a Baptist minister from Washington, D.C. "It's contrary to the express will of God."

The pronouncements by a half-dozen clerics from various denominations drew an immediate outcry from gay activists, who responded with a news conference at the same site. They denounced the ministers' news conference, which was organized by the conservative Family Research Council, as a political ploy.

"This is a very well-orchestrated political campaign against the gay community."

—Winnie Stachelberg, Human Rights Campaign

"This is a very well-orchestrated political campaign against the gay community," said Winnie Stachelberg, political director of the gay activist Human Rights Campaign.

Religious activists at the clerics' news conference accused gay activists of trying to influence public policy through lobbying.

"There's no lobby promoting adultery. There's no lobby promoting fornication. It's the homosexual lobby that is changing laws," said Steve Schmidt of the Family Research Council. "That's why we've had to respond."

Wednesday's moves, conferences were the latest in a recent public dispute over the issue of morality. Several religious groups took out full-page newspaper advertisements last month denouncing homosexuality.

Earlier, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., compared homosexuality to kleptomania. And Green Bay Packers star Reggie White, an ordained minister, drew fire from gay activists and political liberals for calling homosexuality a sin during a broad attack on homosexuality in a speech to the Wisconsin legislature.

Senate Republican leaders have blocked a vote on confirming James Hormel, a homosexual, as ambassador to Luxembourg to protest what some have called Hormel's promotion of a "gay lifestyle." And last month, the House voted to block federal payments to San Francisco or any other city that requires city contractors to provide benefits to same-sex partners.

But last week the House voted to uphold a Clinton administration order banning discrimination against homosexual federal workers — a major election-year blow to conservatives.

Worldly philosophies enslave many people

Have you heard of the two blind men who could not see with their physical eyes, but spiritually their eyesight was 20/20?

There was a boy who was born blind, but his condition could be corrected by delicate surgery. After the operation, he was exposed to light little-by-little. Then one day, his mother led him outdoors, where he saw the sky. "Oh mother," he cried, "why didn't you tell me it was so beautiful?" The mother cried and then replied, "I tried to tell you, my dear, but you couldn't understand."

When we open our spiritual eyes, we are able to see the spiritual beauty we never saw nor understood. We come to see that things far transcend the wonderful attractions of physical sight. That is the way truth comes to us from our studies in the Scriptures.

The two blind men knew that Jesus was the Messiah and his teachings were to bring deliverance, wholeness and peace. They cried out to him, "Lord, son of David, have mercy on us!"

Many people today have dimmed eyesight and are slaves to philosophies of the world. They are "up" with the material, "down" with the "spiritual." The closer we get to our Heavenly Father, the more we will do things the way he wants them done.

Mormonism is a revealed religion

I'm responding to Jane Stauffer's request for something "Mormon" to argue about.

Anything a person thinks, says, feels or does has language involved in it. Not all concepts have references in reality. Any person acquainted with the concept of unicorns can see unicorns in the mind's eye, but no amount of hypostatizing will make the unicorn appear in reality.

The Christian world generally believes in an omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent God. Mormons do not. Simply put, if God is omnipresent (present everywhere, almost but not quite pantheism), then God cannot move. He cannot move because he is already everywhere. So God, along with not being omnipotent, cannot be omnipresent because he cannot know that he can move.

As with the unicorn, we can conceptualize about that type of God till that we want, but the concept has no reference in reality. We can hypostatize about that God until we are blue in the face and language deserts us, but he will still be non-existent in reality.

Mormonism is not a hand-me-down religion that can be traced back to either Catholicism or the fruits of the Reformation. Mormonism is a revealed religion. Your turn.

Evan Silberman, 9, looks on as his parents, Margaret Clark and Ralph Silberman, light candles to observe Sabbath Friday in their Arlington, Va., home. Clark and Silberman host Sabbath dinners, attend services and send their children to Torah school at Adat Shalom, a Reconstructionist synagogue they helped found. But Clark is restricted from some aspects of synagogue life, such as leading the congregation in prayer, because she's not Jewish.

Jews tackle issue of gentile spouses

Reconstructionist Federation struggles with what role non-Jewish should play

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Margaret Clark and husband Ralph Silberman attend services, prepare Sabbath dinners and send their two children to Torah school at Adat Shalom, a Reconstructionist synagogue they helped found in Rockville, Md. Clark is barred, however, from leading the congregation in prayer and from participating in other aspects of synagogue life.

She's not Jewish.

With thousands of active interfaith families like Clark and Silberman's, the progressive Jewish Reconstructionist Federation has struggled with the role gentile members should play. The federation is considered American Judaism's smallest but fastest-growing branch.

Earlier this year, a Reconstructionist task force issued guidelines for congregations trying to embrace interfaith families while retaining their Jewish character. Clark, who helped Adat Shalom develop policies more than a year ago, applauds the effort.

"It's important to me that people know and recognize and deal with the fact that there are non-Jewish members of the congregation and that it not be some dirty little secret," says Clark, a free-lance writer from Arlington, Va.

The recommendations are not binding on the more than 90 Reconstructionist congregations. The movement, based in Wyncote, Pa., treats men and women equally in religious practice, welcoming homosexual couples and interfaith families.

The task force convened because rates of Jewish intermarriage have soared. While traditional Judaism still shuns intermarriage, it was comparatively rare just a generation ago. Today, interfaith families comprise an estimated 20 percent of the 20,000 member households in Reconstructionist synagogues. More than 30 percent under 40 married outside the faith.

In its report, "Boundaries and Opportunities: The Role of Non-Jews in Jewish Reconstructionist Federation Synagogues" issued in February, the task force suggests that:

- Gentile spouses be voting members unless active in another religion.
- Children receiving formal instruction in another faith not be enrolled in JRF religious schools.
- Gentiles be allowed to participate but only Jews should lead worship services or receive certain ritual honors.
- A gentile parent may recite certain blessings and open the ark containing the Torah during a bar mitzvah, with similar leeway for weddings and baby namings.

Church congregations face summer slump

COMMENTARY
Tom Schaefer

Ministers are most familiar with this seasonal disease. It's not fatal, and it won't cause permanent disability. Signs of an outbreak begin in June, intensify in July and reach their peak in August.

Fortunately, symptoms of the disease are easy to spot – half-empty pews on Sunday mornings and Sunday schools with fewer children than are in a retirement center. The disease, as you probably know by now, is called The Summer Slump. And while the ultimate cure is the start of a church's fall programs, no one has found a successful treatment.

Until now.

After exhaustive research and one bad night of insomnia, I have come up with some potential treatments that just might provide an antidote. (Granted, each of these treatments could be risky – I haven't done all the FDA, EPA and EPV-approved tests to see if they're safe – but there's your chance to be on the cutting edge.

I accept no responsibility should any one of the 10 prescriptions fail. (Of course, if any one of them works, I claim all credit – and subsequent publishing rights.)

With that, I give you 10 break-through treatments that just might conquer the dreaded church disease: The Summer Slump:

1. Service should begin at the front door. I'm referring to free valet parking. Welcoming each car's interior could have members coming back Sunday after Sunday.

2. Sunday brunches are offered at many restaurants. Why not at your church in the deli? And for the non-Baptist crowd, make it a champagne brunch.

3. Who wants to sit on wooden pews on a hot Sunday morning? Arrange Barcalounges near the front of the sanctuary for the first 25 people at the morning service.

4. Let's have a time-out on the Bach chorales and the Gregorian chants. Warm up the congregation with some choir performances of "Ain't Misbehavin'" or "Going My Way." Choreography is optional.

5. Can you name that tune in three notes? With the promise of some fun prizes, your organist will have people jumping out of their seats when the game gets started.

6. Face it, preacher. Although your words may be inspired, your congregation needs a breather from extended homilies. To assure them they won't be nodding off and they'll still have time for some Sunday recreation – post the following sign on the pulpit: "Trapdoor under preacher automatically will be activated if sermon is longer than 5 minutes."

7. Lottery-fever may be "sinful," but who could resist a free drawing for half the morning's collection plate contents?

8. Summer is not the time to have long worship services. To keep that from happening, introduce The Ultimate Ushers with bombastic fanfare. In their World Wrestling Federation attire, they'll keep track of time and bring the morning service to a swift and colorful conclusion. Thirty minutes, tops.

9. It's such a shame for the baptistry to be unused. Announce free swimming after the service.

10. If all else fails, don't forget your ace in the hole – a grand-prize drawing for one excused absence from the fall's Stewardship Sunday pledge drive.

Rob Shiflett poses with some of the guns he sells in his store, Christian Soldier in Baltimore.

'Christian soldier' calls for contemporary weapons

The Baltimore Sun

BALTIMORE — As he struggled to realize his dream of opening a gun shop, Rob Shiflett turned to the figure he considers top gun: God. His prayers answered, Shiflett, a self-described born-again Christian, decided to return the favor. The Army veteran named the gun shop he opened in August Christian Soldier.

Some local ministers have not taken kindly to the name, but Shiflett, 37, is standing his ground, arguing that modern spiritual warfare calls for contemporary weaponry.

"I'm a Christian, and I'm a soldier. I thought Christian Soldier would be a good name," said Shiflett, standing behind a handgun-filled glass counter recently with several semiautomatic rifles displayed on the wall behind him.

By the door, two plastic boxes held religious tracts for his customers: "I was asking God to get this business started. How could I turn my back on him?

Shiflett describes himself as a gun collector — "I hardly even shoot" — who was able to turn his hobby into a livelihood. He runs the shop on a variable schedule, to accommodate his hours on his other job as a Baltimore County paramedic. He said that before deciding on the name for his shop, he consulted his pastor.

He remembered seeing trucks on the highway emblazoned with the initials of a company called Guaranteed Overnight Delivery, G.O.D.

"I always saw that, and I was offended. I thought I didn't want to be in that guy's shoes come Judgment Day," he said, adding he chose something he thought not to be sacrilegious.

Shiflett said he had religious inspiration in naming his shop and that the response has been overwhelmingly positive, but acknowledges getting three or four complaints from people who have seen the shop's name on the window flanked by two Christian symbols of fish and have come into the shop to give him a piece of their gospel.

"One lady came in, and she said, 'I don't think Jesus would have approved of guns,'" said Shiflett, who responded with the Gospel story of Jesus clearing the money-changers from the temple in Jerusalem.

"I said, 'If he had a pistol at his side, he probably would have shot a few rounds in the air.'"

Ozarks provide setting for 'New Holy Land'

The Dallas Morning News

EUREKA SPRINGS, Ark. — Here is the place where Christ was born. Here is the Tabernacle with the Ark of the Covenant that traveled with the Israelites through the Sinai. Here is Simon Peter himself, walking the shores of the Sea of Galilee.

The hills are too green for Galilee and the accents are sometimes jarring — Jesus was an Okie? — but this is the New Holy Land, a pilgrimage spot for Christians set in the middle of the Ozarks.

Spread over more than 100 acres is a seven-story statue of Jesus, the outdoor setting for The Great Passion Play, and replicas of more than 40 items or locations mentioned in the Bible.

But this is no simple theme park, no Three Crosses Over Arkansas. It's a ministry and the mostly purified legacy of a man whose life combined piety and bigotry in equal measure.

Today's visitors come from all races and across the world. Arkansas and Kentucky, India and Bermuda, Texas and Louisiana were all represented last weekend.

More than 60 members of Zion Christian Methodist Episcopal Church in Manden, La., all wearing matching "Jesus Did It!" T-shirts, were there for what was a hot, humid two-and-a-half hour tour on open-air trams. They visited the reconstruction of a first-century inn, house and stable that looked almost nothing like the American Christmas card versions. A woman who identified herself as the innkeeper's wife told the story of a night when the inn and even her home were packed with travelers and her husband heard a cry from outside in the darkness. And how she and her husband found the best place they could offer, the clean, cool manger, as a place for Joseph and Mary.

The man who started it all – Gerald L.K. Smith – began attracting attention in the 1930s. For more than 40 years, he preached a combination of "Christianity and Constitutional Americanism" that included, in his own words, "all racial groups adjusted to their place in history without abortive attempts being made to destroy the destiny of the races as originally outlined by the Creator."

Smith was described only a couple of months ago by a columnist in the Little Rock Arkansas Democrat-Gazette as a "bellowing racist, a fascist and an anti-Semite." He was also an ordained minister in the Christian Church.

Eureka Springs was created by people rushing in on the reputation of the local "healing" waters. Smith had visited the area and decided this was the place for his stories, "Christ of the Ozarks." Shortly after the statue was finished, in 1966, Smith and others decided to create a Passion play, then a New Holy Land.

Locals credit the same project for jump-starting the town economy. Other Christian-related attractions have sprung up nearby over the years. There's a monastery in the neighborhood. And The Promised Land Animal Park, which quotes Hebrews 11:8 on its pamphlet. And Covenant Gardens, which bills itself as "the biblical botanical garden of Northwest Arkansas." The Cup of Inspiration gift shop is next door to the Pine Mountain Jamboree. One stretch of the highway is adopted, it says on the sign, by a local meditation society.

Smith died in 1976. His wife, Elna, for whom the Elna M. Smith Foundation that controls the operation was named, died in 1981.

None of the people in leadership positions today carry formal credentials for their jobs. But they include several ordained ministers.

The operation retains just a hint of the old Smith. The Passion play includes the infamous "blood oath" line found only in the Gospel of Matthew and used as justification for generations of anti-Semitism, although many other similar productions around the world have dropped it.

Those in charge mostly sigh when asked how they separate Smith's unsavory political past from this operation's spiritual present and future. In their hearts, they want to include all and offend none, they say.

Vatican forges Internet connections with far-flung bishops

VATICAN CITY (AP) — From Washington to Warsaw, the pope's brother bishops and his diplomatic soldiers will soon grow closer with a new computer network.

Working out of the Internet Office behind the Vatican's walls, church experts are building a network that will let bishops enter a password and download instructions and documents direct from Rome.

Meanwhile, Vatican nunciatures, or embassies, will be provided direct access to the Vatican's computers. Instead of using a local Internet server to log on via the Vatican's Web site, diplomats will tie into Vatican computers through private phone-line connections.

Envoys and the office of the Vatican's secretary of state will be able to exchange diplomatic instructions and field reports — whether about persecution of Roman Catholics or the state of church-run hospitals — instantly and securely via e-mail.

The direct hookup will be a major boon, particularly in countries where Internet connections must be made through state-controlled servers, said Sister Judith Zoebelein, technical director of the Internet Office.

When it comes to governments that may be hostile to the church, "the last thing we want is our e-mail sitting there," she said.

Diplomatic messages will be encrypted for added security, she added.

The two projects, expected to be in place by the end of the year, fit in with major strides in technology under Pope John Paul II, who has shown himself adept at spreading his message with the tools of the digital age.

He has set up a Vatican broadcasting office, recorded the rosary on compact disc and is moving forward with an authoritative Vatican Internet site for laymen.

The Web site started simply, giving the text of John Paul's 1952 Christmas message and providing a destination for e-mails. Three-and-a-half years later, the site's developers have plans to create what looks uncannily like a virtual papacy.

Programmers are working on having the site provide live audio feeds of the pope's words, starting with his Sunday blessing; video clips of papal activities; and an electronic archive of every papal document this century.

By 2000, predicts Bishop Claudio Maria Celli, who oversees the Internet Office, all the teachings of this century's nine popes will be available on the Internet.

Al Odom stands by his vehicle, adorned with a Fishers of Men National Tournament Trail logo, in Sumter, S.C. Odom is the driving force behind Fishers of Men, which brings spirituality and hard-core fishing together.

Group brings fishing, spirituality together

SUMTER, S.C. (AP) — No matter how many fat, squirming tournament bass he pulled from waters throughout the Southeast, Al Odom felt unfulfilled.

"I thought there was something I should be doing," said Odom, a longtime bass pro from Sumter.

So Odom became the driving force behind the Fishers of Men Tournament Trail. For a $110 entry fee, two-man fishing teams satisfy their desires for competition and fellowship.

"That's really the whole push behind it, using my passion for bass as an evangelistic outreach," he said.

The series of tournaments, with 270 members, bills itself as an alternative to tournaments where some competitors swore, drank alcohol or cheated.

"Yeah, that's a problem," said Bill Howard, pastor at West Columbia's Agape Baptist Church who qualified for the Fishers of Men national tournament in October at Lake Guntersville, Ala. "This trail is just the opposite."

It also is one more example of how sports-and-religion are mixing.

From the front-page evangelism of football stars "Neon" Deion Sanders and Reggie White, to the NASCAR garage church services that drivers attend before Winston Cup races, to the praise golfer Tom Lehman gives the Lord at PGA tournaments, many athletes are eager to display their faith these days.

"It's becoming more pronounced," said former New York Yankees all-star Bobby Richardson who serves on the Fishers of Men national board.

The deeply religious Richardson, who played with some of the Yankees' best-known carousers, would organize devotions and always invite them. Mickey Mantle would often say, "Oh, no, I can't come, I'm going out," Richardson recalled. "But five minutes later he'd walk through the door all dressed. He was one of our biggest supporters."

Book recognizes cross collection

Knight-Ridder/Tribune News Service

SAN JOSE, Calif. — In early July, 60 years after Ernie Reda's mother gave him his first cross in Bluefield, Ky., the retired San Jose handyman received this letter from the special projects coordinator at the Guinness Book of World Records:

"Congratulations! I am happy to report that your claim for the largest collection of crosses has been accepted as a new record."

"I felt like jumping up and down, to have the world's humor," says Reda, 75, whose collection, the result of a patient, decades-long spiritual obsession, includes 8,439 crosses and crucifixes, not to mention the 2,758 other "religious items," 1,758 religious books and 21,200 religious postcards and greeting cards that he has wedged into his Latimer Avenue garage. This effusion of religious artifacts fills the room, floor to ceiling: crosses made of gold, silver, buttons and matchsticks; crosses that stand 8 feet tall; and crosses that would fit on the tip of Tom Thumb's pinky.

Advisers promote faith-based financial planning

The Dallas Morning News

People have long worshiped money. Now more people are listening to what religion has to say about it.

With the booming economy, increasing debt and problems with bankruptcy, more investors are seeking financial advice with a religious bent, said Paul D. Nelson, president of the Virginia-based Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability.

"Perhaps it's getting highlighted with the trends in our economy and our culture," said Nelson, whose association audits religious organizations, including some Christian financial advisers.

While there are no firm numbers, experts say the increased interest in religious financial planning is evident in the number of books, radio shows and seminars on the topic. The nine-month-old National Association of Christian Financial Consultants has 130 members but expects to have 1,000 within two years.

Dave Ramsey, a Tennessee national radio show host and author who advises people on personal finance, said applying biblical financial principles to life is part of a person's larger faith.

We have a reputation of putting people in their place.

Been doin' it for more than 50 years, as one of the largest mortgage companies in America. But we have more than just a long history of financial service. Considering our ties with General Motors and GMAC we're a solid company with strong financial backing. Granted, all the corn-cribby make us the talk of the town. But when you've got a reputation, you've gotta live up to it.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"There aren't any embarrassing questions — just embarrassing answers."
— Carl Rowan

"How did you beat the heart game on board 18?" asked a duplicate fan.

"I switched to diamonds at trick two," was the answer.

"So did I," replied the fan. "But we didn't beat the game."

At both tables, West led his spade king and correctly decided to shift to diamonds when South dropped the spade nine. With no club tricks available, West saw that the only hope was to switch to diamonds, playing East to hold the diamond king. Besides, if East didn't have the diamond king, South could finesse against West's diamond queen anyway.

The first West shifted meekly to the diamond eight. South ducked in dummy, and East had to play his king. After ruffing East's spade return and leading trumps, South took a winning diamond finesse against West's queen and lost only three tricks.

What diamond did the successful West lead? Instead of the eight, he led his 10! This astute play paralyzed South. If he covered with dummy's jack, East would win and return the suit. And when West won his trump ace, he had a diamond winner to cash for the setting trick.

Note that a switch to the diamond queen would have been better than leading the eight. After dummy's ace wins, when West wins his trump ace and leads the diamond eight, South must guess whether West was tricky enough to have led the queen from K-Q-8.

Sometimes, switching to the right suit is not enough. One must also lead the right card.
